Heat on Iran hostage-takers

Bani-Sadr denounces militants

Times News Services

TEHRAN (CP) — Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr has angrily denounced Moslem militants holding the U.S. embassy here as "dictators who have created a government within a government."

Bani-Sadr criticized the militants today after they alleged on national television Tuesday night that National Guidance Minister Nasser Minachi cultivated close links with U.S. diplomats before the embassy seizure Nov. 4.

Their charges resulted in Minachi's unauthorized midnight arrest at his home and detention in Evin prison by Revolutionary Guards acting without the approval of the state prosecutor.

The militants alleged Minachi provided U.S. embassy officials with vital information on the developing Iranian anti-shah revolution and kept up contacts with CIA agents in the "spy nest" even after his appointment as minister by the Bazargan provisional government.

Minachi denied all of the documents as "false papers" that misrepresented his dealings.

Bani-Sadr told the Tehran daily Kayhan that although the militants may not realize it, they are paving the way for lawlessness in the country.

The newly installed president also attacked the state-owned television network for allowing the broadcast time without seeking prior government approval.

The comments represented Bani-Sadr's strongest attack so far on the militants holding some 50 Americans hostage at the embassy.

The incident surfaced on the day a special delegation of 50 U.S. citizens was due to arrive at the invitation of the students to discuss Iranian grievances against the U.S.

The head of the group, interviewed in London en route to Tehran, accused the

Alexander Ryaguzof and Yelinda Terekhova have been granted asylum

Defectors plan marriage, new life in Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two Soviet defectors came out of hiding today and announced they plan to get married and seek employment in Vancouver.

Alexander Ryaguzof, 33, a cargo officer, and Yelina Terekhova, 22, a cleaning woman, fled a Soviet freighter last Thursday when it was docked near Campbell River on Vancouver Island.

Immigration minister Ron Atkey has issued the two ship-jumpers a ministerial permit, allowing them to remain in Canada until they acquire landed immigrant status.

Ryaguzof told a news conference that everyone should have a choice, and after visiting Vancouver 20 to 30 times during his eight years at sea, he decided to settle in his favorite city.

He said both political and non-political beliefs were involved in his decision.

Miss Terekhova said she needed some convincing to join Ryaguzof in the defection. She said she plans to take English classes and then find work. She has already been offered two jobs.

Ryaguzof said he will send money to a wife he left behind in the Soviet Union. He said his years at sea resulted in a deterioration of their relationship. The defector also said he will miss his seven-year-old daughter.

Flower power time

Flower Power comes to Victoria again Friday as the annual Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce outdoor blossom count gets under way.

The flower count has been elevated to the status of a major event by Tourism British Columbia, according to chamber past president Mel Cooper.

The provincial government will film events associated with the count for showing in other North American cities.

For example, there will be flower count segments in Tourism B.C. films shown during a "blitz" visit to Prairie cities in March.

"Some people laughed when we started this but now it is an important event," Cooper said.

The flower count was started by the chamber in 1976, at the suggestion of member Bill McCreadie, and citizens reported 183,000 blossoms.

The total has increased each year and in 1979 there were 1.5 million counted. The goal this year is two million.

Project director Carmela Costigan said B.C. Tel has given the chamber the number 381-5315 in perpetuity for the flower count.

A team will take calls in Eaton's window for six days starting Friday.

The daily count will be reported in the Times and press releases on the count will be going out to 1,700 travel writers across North America.

Victoria seed packets and flowers will be delivered to TV talk show hosts both in Canada and the United States.

Type B flu epidemic headed for Victoria

Type B flu — nearing epidemic levels in six Washington State counties — is on its way here, Capital Regional District health officer Dr. A. S. Arneil predicted today.

"If it's happening there, it will happen here," he said.

Absentee rates ranging from 10 to 30 per cent were reported last week at Washington schools in King, Pierce, Snohomish, Skagit, Cowlitz and Klickitat counties.

Type B flu symptoms include a high fever, sore throat, coughing and muscular pains.

Provincial epidemiologist Dr. A. A. Larsen reported last Thursday that there were outbreaks of flu in several B.C. communities.

Dr. Arneil revealed that one Victoria school has reported an absentee rate of more than 25 per cent but absenteeism in other schools isn't as serious as yet.

He would not identify the affected school.

Dr. Don Kettyls, of the provincial virology services lab in Vancouver, said so far this year there have been no instances of a flu virus being identified in B.C.

But he said he knows that swab samples sent in by health officers around the province and received in the last few days will contain influenza virus.

Dr. Kettyls said it is important to identify the strain so that flu vaccines can be kept up to date.

"We want to be sure we're not seeing a new strain that would cause the pandemic situation we had with the Asian strain," he said.

Dr. Kettyls said that absenteeism in schools averages between 5 and 8 per cent, but when there is a dramatic increase to 20, 30 or 40 per cent, it's a safe bet that there's a flu outbreak.

Dr. Arneil said anyone who has the flu should stay home to avoid spreading the virus.

B.C. wants to put 100 in solar hot water

The provincial government plans to invite British Columbians to participate in a solar energy experiment.

The government hopes to get 100 solar hot water heaters installed in homes around the province, with the homeowner paying the lion's share of the cost.

The energy ministry plans to place advertisements in newspapers inviting inquiries from interested citizens.

Cost of the installations will be about $2,500, said Bob Evans, director of energy conservation and technology.

The government would pay one third of the cost under a federal-proincial arrangement. Total cost of the project is estimated at $300,000. Its purpose is to demonstrate that solar heaters do work.

"There's an awful lot of interest in solar energy and an awful lot of skepticism," Evans said.

He expects the 100 installations to demonstrate the economic effectiveness of solar energy.

Each installation consists of a solar collector on the roof connected to a pre-heater tank. Water is heated as much as possible by solar energy, then pumped into the conventional hot water tank to be brought up to the usual temperature.

Evans estimates a solar powered heater will save the householder $10 to $15 a month — about half the normal cost of heating hot water.

"This project is important not only to B.C. but to all Canadians," Energy Minister Bob McClelland said.

"It represents the first large-scale field test of this solar energy application and it will indicate the extent to which our energy future can realistically start to depend upon solar energy," he said.

Bomb threat diverts Clark's campaign jet

OTTAWA (CP) — The chartered plane carrying Prime Minister Clark and his campaign entourage landed safely here early this morning after a bomb threat turned out to be a hoax.

The DC-9 aircraft with its 72 passengers and seven crew members had been forced to return to Charlottetown at 10:36 p.m. AST, less than 20 minutes after takeoff when the captain was told of the threat.

The plane stayed on the ground for 90 minutes while RCMP and Air Canada personnel searched it. No bomb was found.

Eventually, with several reporters chanting, "hell, no, we won't go," the plane was reboarded for the two-hour uneventful flight to Ottawa. Clark and Secretary of State David MacDonald were the only cabinet ministers on board.

Clark, who had relaxed at the Charlottetown Hotel while the search was conducted, chatted casually with reporters on the flight to Ottawa after all had feasted on a lobster dinner.

Clark said he spent the time in Charlottetown talking to the RCMP and watching the 11 p.m. television news. The RCMP searched the hotel room before he was allowed to enter.

Captain Ric Morrow told a news conference he was notified of the bomb threat eight minutes after the 10:20 AST takeoff. He then announced over the plane's loud speaker it would be returning to Charlottetown because of a minor technical problem.

Only the crew and a few Clark aides were told the truth.

The DC-9 returned to Charlottetown airport less than 10 minutes after the pilot was informed of the threat and landed almost four-fifths of a kilometre (half a mile) from the main terminal.

Riding solid NDP

The Nanaimo-Alberni area is solid New Democratic Party territory — federally and provincially — and nothing much is going to change that in the Feb. 18 federal election, a Times survey indicates.

Reporter Mike Hughes, during a tour of the area, found even people who are going to vote against him concede former teacher Ted Miller is again the solid favorite.

Read his report on page 15.

Terror, absolute terror: witness

MISSISSAUGA, Ont. (CP) — A witness to the Nov. 10 derailment of a CP Rail Ltd. train said Tuesday the incident filled her with "terror, absolute terror."

Kathleen Dabor and her husband, Ronald, were waiting in their car at the level crossing where the derailment occurred. They are the only witnesses to the accident that forced the evacuation of about 250,000 residents from this city just west of Toronto.

Testifying at the inquiry into the railway accident, the Dabors commented on the high speed of the train just before it left the track.

Mrs. Dabor, who told the court that she has a habit of counting passing railcars when stopped at a crossing, said that CP Rail's train 54 was moving too fast for her to count.

Her husband, who said he had seen about 100 trains pass over the same crossing during the last eight years, testified that he had never seen one go that fast — he estimated its speed at more than 70 miles an hour (112 kilometres an hour).

Dabor said that soon after he stopped the car his wife saw what she believed to be a flare coming from the end of the train. But he said as the train got closer, they realized the flare was really sparks coming from the wheel of a tanker car.

Mrs. Dabor testified that the wheels on one car were off the rails. They had raised off the track, causing the car to become uncoupled, and several cars were then dragged along the ground. This led to a pile-up of cars, which she described as "a big log-jam."

One rail car overturned, hit the road and then exploded, she said, showering the car with metal debris.

By this time, Dabor said, he had already started to back up his car. Some damage had been done to the left front wheel, and as he backed it down the road it swerved into a ditch several hundred metres away.

"I made one quick attempt to get it out," he said. "Then I said to my wife: 'Run for your life,' which we did."

Both testified that the burning rail cars were throwing off tremendous heat. "When I was running the heat was so intense I thought my hair was on fire," Mrs. Dabor said.

Later, Dabor said, they got into the car of a couple who had been attracted to the scene by the flames. They witnessed a third explosion which shook the car.

Asked if he went to the hospital after his escape, Dabor replied that he went home and opened a 15-year-old bottle of cognac he had been saving for a special occasion.

The first policeman on the scene of the derailment also testified that he saw three explosions.

Const. Brian Kelly said that immediately after the third explosion one of the rail tankers went flying through the sky, trailing flames.

San Salvador terrorists free hostages

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Right wing terrorists kidnapped three Communist political leaders and threatened to kill them if leftists occupying the Spanish Embassy did not leave by tonight, but later released their hostages unharmed, police said today.

There was no immediate explanation why the Communists were released.

The ultra-rightist Organization for the Struggle Against Communism had said in a communique to local newspapers that it had taken Mario Avinada Carranza and two other unidentified leaders of the Nationalist Democratic Union, the Communist-front party, from their homes.

About 20 members of the Feb. 28 Popular Leagues, or LP-28, took over the embassy without a fight Tuesday, taking the Spanish ambassador and eight other persons hostage. They demanded that Spain break relations with El Salvador's military-dominated government and that the government release four LP-28 members they said were arrested Sunday.

The government denied holding the four leftists.

Meanwhile, police reported another leftist leader shot to death at his home Tuesday night, and about 100 radical high-school students were holding Education Minister Eduardo Colindres and hundreds of others hostage at the education ministry.

The students invaded the ministry Tuesday demanding a 40-per-cent reduction in the tuition fees charged by private colleges.

Water may have killed young wife

TORONTO (CP) — A dream vacation in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, turned into a tragic nightmare for a Toronto man Sunday when his young wife died of an unidentified illness.

Two days before Richard Shapero and his wife Laura, 28, returned to Toronto on Jan. 27, she began to suffer diarrhea and vomiting. Last Friday, she was admitted to hospital complaining of violent headaches.

Two days later she died.

Shapero believes it had something to do with the bottled water recommended for drinking by their hotel.

Mel Horowitz, who headed the Mexican tour, has since had the water tested by the Ontario health department and was told the so-called "pure water" was unfit for human consumption.

Shapero says if his wife's death is found to be linked to the contaminated water, he will take legal action against the hotel.

Inmates do little damage

BURNABY (CP) — Damage was minimal to the south wing of the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre during a disturbance which started Tuesday night and ended this morning, Oakalla director Henry Bjarnason said.

Bjarnason said 28 prisoners began a peaceful sit-in about 10 p.m. Tuesday, but propoals he made this morning failed to satisfy some of them and they began breaking furniture.

Prison guards moved in quickly.

Ads for car pills false, firm admits

MONTREAL (CP) — Jay Norris Corp. of Canada pleaded guilty in sessions court Tuesday to falsely advertising "pills" that it claimed would clean the pistons and valves of a car when dropped into a gas tank.

Known as Motaloy Tabs, the pills sell at $6.99 for a package of four. The federal department of consumer and corporate affairs, which brought the charge, said the pills are a blend of several metals which do not dissolve in gasoline and could even perforate a gas tank.

Sentencing was set for Feb. 13.

Carter administration of artificially perpetuating the hostage crisis to "make political capital out of it" and charged that the U.S. media is misrepresenting the Iranians.

Norman Forer, 54, a professor on leave from the University of Kansas, said he has kept a dialogue with Iranian revolutionaries since the early 1970s and was invited Jan. 17 to visit the Americans being held hostage in the embassy.

"The hostages could have been freed long ago, but for the attitude of certain people in the U.S. administration who are helping to maintain the crisis artificially while they make political capital out of it," said Forer, spokesman for the Committee for American-Iranian Crisis Resolution.

"Hostage hysteria has totally obscured the issue of American intervention in Iran under the shah."

Meanwhile, it was reported that Iran's Islamic Revolutionary Council would accept a U.N. proposal tonight setting up an international commission to investigate the alleged crimes of the shah.

And in a related development, the State Department issued an assessment of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi's treatment of political prisoners in Iran that was in sharp contrast with earlier favorable accounts of his rule.

The department's annual report to Congress on human rights said "many thousands of Iranians" were imprisoned and tortured under the shah's two decades of rule.

It said the shah's security forces took the lives of "at least several thousand people" in trying to quell the 1978 and 1979 demonstrations that led to his ouster.

In Panama City, a spokesman for the shah strongly denied that the deposed ruler planned to leave his refuge in Panama.

Murphy didn't twig?

VANCOUVER (CP) — A former broadcaster accused along with a Vancouver businessman of conspiring to bribe a provincial cabinet minister may not have realized that the co-accused might have been suggesting the illegal action, the man's defence lawyer told county court Tuesday.

Leonard Doust, defence lawyer for broadcaster Ed Murphy, made the closing remark in the trial of Murphy and businessman Douglas Holme, accused of conspiring to bribe former environment minister Jim Nielsen to assist them in getting land released from the agricultural land reserve.

Doust said Murphy was so "captivated and seduced by the prospect of millions" that he failed to realize Holme may have been suggesting a bribe.

Nielsen, now minister of consumer and corporate affairs, has testified that he had no contact regarding the matter with either of the accused and was never offered a bribe.

Doust asked Judge Lee Skipp first to consider Holme's defence and, if he found it "reasonable and plausible," to acquit both men without considering Murphy's role in the alleged conspiracy.

Holme's defence amounted to a flat denial that he ever suggested or discussed offering Nielsen a bribe and an argument that the Crown misinterpreted his wiretapped phone conversations with Murphy.

Doust conceded that if Holme's defence failed, it would follow that the Crown correctly interpreted the phone conversations as containing a suggestion by Holme that Nielsen should be offered a bribe.

But he argued that to convict Murphy of conspiracy, the court must find that the former broadcaster agreed, within the legal meaning of the term, to offer the minister a bribe.

Doust argued that the first wiretapped conversation indicated that Holme may have suggested to Richmond businessman Philip Chutter that Nielsen should be offered a bribe, but the proposal went right over Murphy's head.

During that phone call to Murphy, Holme said: "We've got to get Nielsen to get it out of the land reserve." He also said: "We pay him a hundred grand to get it out."

The defence lawyer said Murphy didn't realize the significance of a second phone call in which Holme talked to him about getting land out of the reserve and said he had told Chutter: "I said a hundred Gs will do it."

$662,000 appeal planned

PENTICTON (CP) — The Insurance Corp. of B.C. will appeal a $662,000 B.C. Supreme Court award to a Vancouver man injured in a diving accident at a city beach.

ICBC, insurer for the City of Penticton, has instructed its lawyers to appeal the judgment by Mr. Justice H.E. Hutcheon granting the money to Terry LeBlanc, 25, who was paralysed from the neck down in the August, 1978, accident.

Bob Egby, manager of media relations for ICBC, said in Vancouver today that the appeal is likely to be heard in November.

100 to be tested after TB confirmed

CHILLIWACK (UPC) — About 100 persons, the majority of them military personnel at the Canadian Forces Base in Chilliwack, are to be tested following confirmation that a civilian cook at the base had active tuberculosis when he died Dec. 14.

Dr. Jack Sturdy, a pathologist at Chilliwack General Hospital, said he would be "very surprised if we find any cases of TB" among the persons receiving skin tests.

David George, one of the base's cooks, died when a fire destroyed the motel unit where he lived. The coroner at the time, Dr. Doug Colledge, decided against conducting an autopsy because the actual cause of death was burns and smoke inhalation.

But Sturdy said the provincial coroner's office ordered the body exhumed last week because of incomplete medical records, and an autopsy by Sturdy revealed the TB.

Sturdy said the exhumation and reports of TB had caused "great panic" in the Chilliwack area, about 100 kilometres east of Vancouver.

Sturdy said the list of those who came in contact with George were prepared with the assistance of military authorities in Chilliwack. If the skin tests prove positive, chest X-rays will be ordered.

A base spokesman said George had undergone a required chest X-ray in September and the results showed he was not suffering from the disease. A recheck of the original X-ray was made last week, which confirmed that no disease was apparent in September.

Pierre just outflies his vows

CALGARY — There are certain advantages to jet-age politics, speeding leaders to one region of the country while the leftover wisps of charisma still linger in another.

Like some Flying Dutchman of the skies, a reticent politican can float through the clouds, the adoring flock never quite sure where he will alight.

Because of the speed and the time zones, the man who wants to be PM can beat the fallout from his promises to one province, zooming on to contradictory promises far afield, the newspaper and TV clips floundering in his wake.

It's way the Liberal entourage, run by the packagers who wrap the bacon you see in supermarkets, leaps half a country between speeches — fleeing accountability. The Wright Brothers and their heirs have a lot to answer for.

Pierre Trudeau, who learns his lessons well, gave a perfect example of the art in less than 24 hours. What you do is out-jet your promises.

Zooming into Thunder Bay late Monday, the Flying Dutchman of politics had to be muscled through an adoring crowd of Liberals at the da Vinci Hall.

Playing to his audience, he cried that you "can't strengthen Canada by making Ontario weaker."

He was almost bowled over by the applause, signifying all the worry of Ontario, once the Fat Cat of Confederation, now worried silly that the blue-eyed shieks of Red Deer have become resentful Top Dogs.

The Trudeau inference was clear — Joe Clark and Lougheed must be stopped in their intention to wreak revenge on poor old Ontario.

Great stuff for Thunder Bay. And before the local disc jockies can blurt the news, we're into the ozone on the way to hateful Calgary — where quite another message is delivered.

There is, in the city that still looks as if it's being uncrated, evidence of the Liberal problems in this province. There is plenty of enthusiasm among the rare survivors left, but not quite so much follow through.

In a staged re-creation of Trudeaumania in the lobby of the Calgary Inn on arrival, Himself was almost mangled in the lust of classy ladies of Calgary to get to him.

Alas, no one had bothered to co-ordinate plans with the Trudeau packagers, and he escaped up the elevator to beddy-bys, leaving packs of muttering matrons roaming the lobbies ignored and unloved.

A low-keyed breakfast with the adoring throng subdued feelings, but a lunch for star Calgary Centre candidate George Ho Lem (a former Social Crediter who runs the largest laundry in western Canada) in a Chinese restaurant was presented with the interesting problem of one bartender attempting to fend with some 350 thirsty Calgarians.

If you want to know how thirsty Calgarians can get, you must understand that disbelieving reporters from Montreal, where no one gets serious until noon, are still in shock from awakening at 7:30 to find the soaring towers outside their hotel windows all ablaze, full of the sheikdom on the way to early morning riches.

Amid the interesting cultural spectrum of cowboy yells applauding Trudeau's speech in a Chinese restaurant, one gets the faint impression of the same well-dressed crowd being recycled through three gung-ho exposures to Trudeau.

It seems something like the desparate tactics of the raggedy British army in 1939, parading troops through English villages and then packing them quickly on trucks to zip them to the next morale-boosting village.

The Flying Dutchman did not disappoint, assuring this well-coiffed crew that "Liberals want to help first those who need help most."

He was referring, presumably, to the wife of Senator Keith Davey, who was given a 20-year appointment to a plush Ottawa board before the Trudeaucrats were defeated.

With Thunder Bay well in our jet stream the subject is now "the cavalier way the Clark government dealt with the West."

Tory "decision after decision," went against the beloved West that the Trudeau Liberals were always so fond of.

"Almost every action of the Clark government," as the small bewildered bartender beats off the 350, "hurt the West."

A national government, Mr. Trudeau warned sternly, has to act in the interests of the whole nation. "No government can promise everything to everybody all the time."

No, but we try. Oh, how we try.

Sliding slopes

For Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier, there was an unmistakable sense of deja vu at this week's council meeting.

A few Cordorva Bay residents, led by William Hartley, berated council for not acting on a 1975 soil stability report. The study in question, done by Thurber Consultants Ltd at a cost of $10,000, recommended steps be taken to prevent the eastern slopes of Cordova Bay from sliding.

Hartley, a former public works minister in the NDP government, was armed with a petition from area residents demanding council implement a few of those proposals to prevent valuable property from becoming a heap on the Cordova Bay foreshore.

This flurry of demands and even a threat of court action was prompted by a slide in Demember that damaged three properties. Hartley said it will cost about $50,000 to rebuild one of lots.

The ground water levels apparently build up as surface runoff increases. As soil at lower levels become saturated, its instability grows. The trick is to keep the ground water at manageable levels.

The Thurber report recommends that the speed limit along Cordova Bay Road be reduced to decrease the possibility of a slide being triggered by vibration, particularly from trucks. (Speed limits were lowered for a brief in the past, but opposition from residents caught in speed traps forced council to reconsider.)

The report also recommended that storm drains be installed and that lot sizes be restricted to a five acre minimum. Surface water increases as natural vegetation is removed.

If the municipality can do something about people's properties eroding, then obviously it should get on with it. As Hartley pointed out, landslides tend to adversely affect property values.

But it's ironic that in 1975 former Alderman Mel Couvelier in fact initiated the Thurber study because of similar concerns at the time. He mentioned that at this week's council meeting. What he didn't mention was that in 1977 while running for mayor he charged former Mayor Ed Lum (now alderman) with keeping the Thurber report secret.

Lum at the time denied the allegation and pointed out the report had been tabled at council. It had been referred to the engineering department for study and recommendations.

This week council again referred the matter back to the engineering department for study and recommendations.

Sometimes it takes no longer than five years for history to repeat.

Baby monopoly

Dr. Scott Wallace's point about "regional obstetrics" is well taken. Geography is indeed an important factor for mothers in labor.

Why, he asks, is the Capital Regional District Hospital and Health Planning Commission proposing to give the new Victoria General Hospital a monopoly on delivering babies? He says that while planning for a first-class facility to meet high-risk cases, planners seem to overlook that fact that most pregnancies are normal.

Expectant parents living in Oak Bay and Fairfield will no longer be able to have their babies delivered at the hospital located in their neighborhood. Many, as they make the dash with suitcase in hand, will pass Royal Jubilee on their way to Victoria General on Helmcken Road.

Wallace says the distances involved for both parents and doctors could endanger otherwise routine pregnancies.

We are not sure how much danger is involved, but it might be an idea for the health planning commission to introduce night school courses in the Fairfield and Oak Bay areas on basic baby birth for cabbies and hubbies.

Just a reminder

"One thing that you can count on — when we say we'll do it, we'll do it."

That's what Premier Bennett had say to reporters this week as he defended his government's plans for B.C. Place, a multi-million dollar sport and convention show case to be built on Vancouver's False Creek. As yet the necessary land and money acquisitions haven't been made, but the Bennett says that because he has said it will proceed.

Now, Mr. Premier we wish you the best of luck with B.C. Place. But what about that little old campaign promise for a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island, the one you seem so non-committal on these days. You said you'd do that too. It's overdue.

The only game in town

It is news not because the leader is necessarily going to say anything newsworthy or exciting.

Rather it is news because the leader, unlike the average tourist from Pilot Mound, Man., arrives on a chartered jet plane accompanied by a gaggle of reporters and cameramen. It is news because those reporters and camermamen crowd around him for every second of his stay. It is news because he is met by a crowd of several hundred people, waving signs and otherwise behaving in unusual — and therefore newsworthy — ways.

It is bigger news if it appears that no other leader of a major party is going to visit the city during the election campaign.

Thus it was news when Ed Broadbent, leader of the federal NDP, arrived at the Victoria airport Monday, even if it was only for a 45-minute stop.

Reporters make Broadbent's Victoria stop-over newsworthy.

Hastily arranged

The stopover at Victoria was a last-minute change of plan for Broadbent and boded well for local NDP candidates. The NDP are not like the Liberals and Conservatives who apparently send their leaders around the country to as many ridings as possible, heedless of their chances in those ridings. (Otherwise, why would Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau have come to Victoria last May? Otherwise, why would Joe Clark be bound next week for Skeena riding, where the Tories collected a measly 17 per cent of the vote last time around?)

The NDP tradition, however, is that the leader travels only to ridings where the party is perceived as having at least a reasonable hope of winning. His last minute shift to come to Victoria means the party's national organizers have become convinced that either Esquimalt-Saanich candidate Bob Cameron and/or Victoria candidate Robin Blencoe have at least a tiny hope of knocking off their long-sitting Tory MP opponents.

(The party's national organizers have, of course, been wrong many times before. If they were not, Broadbent couldn't have visited more than 30 ridings in the May election campaign.)

Be that as it may, the change in plan cheered the hearts of local organizers. They made determined efforts to draw a crowd, even though it is not easy to find a large group of people who have time to visit the airport at 4 p.m. on a working day.

They hired red, double-decker buses from both ridings, and managed almost to fill them. The total crowd was perhaps 200.

To draw attention to the event, they arranged to have a prototype of the Trigull aircraft parked a few yards away from the spot where Broadbent's plane would land. The cameramen, ever hungry for "photo opportunities," could then film Broadbent looking at the plane as well as promising support for it.

It all went very much according to plan. The chartered DC-9 landed on time. The passengers, composed it seemed of about 30 cameramen, 15 reporters and five or six New Democrat organizers, descended in orderly fashion. Broadbent examined the Trigull, surrounded by the crush of cameramen, some of whom were complaining that this was the first photo opportunity of the day.

Provincial leader Dave Barrett introduced Broadbent to Cameron, Blencoe, and the local MLAs who had come out for the occasion. Everyone walked 100 yards across the tarmac to a parking lot where the crowd was waiting.

The crowd clapped, cheered, and waved signs supporting Blencoe and Cameron. All the luminaries were introduced. A young girl offered Broadbent a bouquet of daffodils.

Broadbent gave his speech: as planned he promised firm support for Trident, then talked about how the New Democrats, unlike other parties, actually kept their promises. He told the crowd how well the campaign was going across the country.

It was a good speech. There is no question but that Broadbent is sincere, articulate, and well-briefed on the issues.

Devoted met

He stayed to spend ten minutes walking through the crowd, chatting, shaking hands. Since the Victoria-area ridings have never before been perceived as fertile enough ground to justify a leader's visit, it was the first time many of the area's most devoted NDPers had actually met Broadbent. Everyone he talked to seemed to comment later on how personable he was. The photographers snapped more pictures.

Less than an hour after the plane touched down, Broadbent and the gaggle of media boarded two luxury charter buses to take them to Duncan to begin an up-Island campaign swing. The locals remained to pick up the signs and put away the microphone system.

"For a lot of those people, it's probably the only chance they'll ever have to meet the man they see almost as some sort of savior," one worker told me.

For the rest of us, the coming of a party leader to Victoria is news.

Unity issues

The detailed plan of Quebec Liberal leader Claude Ryan's Third Option for Canada has now been published and is really an approval of most of the Pepin-Robarts recommendations. Ryan offers a new federalism. His new constitutional reform document would greatly cut present federal powers in favor of the provinces. Most Canadians disagree with such a decentralization plan. But if an agreement is not achieved, the result will be disastrous for the country as Quebec will separate. If we agree entirely with Ryan's demands, we may as well accept now Rene Levesque's sovereignty-association, as the next step to Ryan's decentralization is Quebec independence before the end of this decade. A Quebec independence would allow socialism to develop very rapidly in this province and no one really knows what will happen to the rest of Canada.

I believe Canada is worth saving at any sacrifice, and we should be prepared to discuss Ryan's proposals and to make the appropriate changes to our federalism. I don't think we should blindly accept any new federalism, as we in the west have evolved in a different way than people in the east. Ryan's proposals may very well be convenient for Eastern provinces but we still have to discuss them and even, to bring our own proposals. I believe premiers of Western provinces should meet and think about a new federalism suitable for us and have all people vote on it.

Trudeau is the only leader able to resist Ryan's demands. Clark has already given in to Ryan by promising to Quebecers everything they like if he is elected. Because I love my country and I am worried about its future, I want Trudeau to lead Canadians with a majority after the Feb. 18 election, and be the defender of our federalism and rights. — Joseph-Germain Dufour, 1217 St. Patrick Street.

Blissymbols

On Jan. 15 in the 'Lifestyles' section of your paper, you printed a photograph with a caption telling of a young man in Winnipeg who used a symbol language to communicate.

The symbols used are known as Blissymbols. The system was invented in Australia by Charles Bliss in the 1940s to be used as an international written language.

The language was first used by non-verbal students at the Ontario Crippled Children's Centre in the early 1970s. The programs have continued to develop in over 30 different countries around the world.

There are many active Blissymbol Programs in the Victoria area. If any of your readers would like more information about Blissymbolics, please contact our office during the week. — Sachi Tamura, Program Director, Greater Victoria Blissymbolics Program, 420 - 620 View Street.

Don't boast

Full credit must be given to the courage of our Iranian ambassador and his staff. We must, however, be very careful in our reactions.

Daniel Schorr, American correspondent at the White House, in response to questions from the CBC, pointed out that all details which were exposed about the escape of the six Americans came from Canadian sources and "all here have been very anxious that as few details as possible be given." There is concern for the safety of the hostages, fear that new tension might lead to some revenge on the part of the guerillas in control at the embassy or at least that they might become more intractable.

Moreover, it seems there was a secret move underway which, with the new less militant foreign minister in office, offered some hope of progress toward release. That is now, temporarily at least, frozen; in fact, one of those engaged in that attempt, is said to have described the recent happening as "a disaster."

When the CBC remarked that in that case the gloating in the States seemed rather out of place, the reply was that if there was gloating, it must be in Canada. There was sincere gratitude being shown by Americans to the Canadian people. "That is understandable," said Mr. Schorr, "but we are not gloating in the sense of saying to Iran, 'See how clever we are — smarter than you.' "

Thus, as I say, Canadians now must make very sure no attempt is made to boast or to capitalize in any way in this desperately crucial situation. — A. F. Davies, 4611 Vantreight Drive.

Laurel and Hardy

I believe the most crucial issue in the federal election is not whether Trudeau or Clark is the most offensive, nor foreign policy, but one of fiscal responsibility.

Clark is trying to lure our attention 10,000 miles away from home because his "real change" domestic economic policies have been rejected. Ignoring the advise of the apolitical Economic Council of Canada, eminent Harvard economist John Kenneth Galbraith, and his own promises, Clark shot mortgage rates to a record level. As predicted, the only benefit was to financiers, at the expense of the middle income earner.

Furthermore, Clark's 18-cent surtax on gasoline has been denounced by economists across Canada as recessionary. And while Clark would have us shell out of our own pockets there is no mention of collecting, let alone having them share the load. In fact, of the $90 billion Clark hopes to collect, $40 billion goes to Alberta Conservative leader Lougheed and $33 billion to the oil companies. This is in the face of Exxon and Standard Oil declaring record profits in the billions. I assume this is the "fair chance" Clark refers to.

Finally, the Clark government has compared UIC to "paying a man to burn his house down"; in the case of Trident they have directly contributed to record unemployment. It is clear that only corporations and Conservatives benefit from the Clark budget, and equally clear that Clark and Crosbie are the Laurel and Hardy of financial management. Let us remember this on Feb. 18. — Lari Mitchell, 9951 3rd Street, Sidney.

Defend budget

In my opinion the Progressive Conservatives have an opportunity in the 1980 election to greatly increase their credibility by observing the following:

They must strongly defend the budget they presented in every detail, barring one.

Oil prices have risen throughout the world; if Canada keeps them artificially low, we will be playing a loan game and will pay dearly for our folly in just a few short years.

The Liberals recognized the need for oil price increases; however they lacked the courage to confront Canadians with the necessity of so doing thus underestimating Canada's capacity to cope with a national need.

The excise tax on gasoline is not new; it is a just tax, one that was initiated by the Liberals at 10 cents and has been increased to 25 cents.

I personally take exception to the levy of this tax on fuel being used for public transport. To eliminate this application would be an act of conservation. Let us not kid ourselves, the riders will not pick up the extra tab, a level of government will.

The low income person has been considered in the budget and some relief from the increase in fuel cost has been extended to them. — Al Bennett, 3597 Beach Drive.

Mail opening

Recently an incident occurred which caused me to feel absolute disillusion, disgust and distrust for the postal service in this country. I refer to the opening and damaging of my personal property which was entrusted to that service; and indeed to the obviously indiscriminate opening of mail and vandalism which abounds in our post offices today.

I am a law-abiding Canadian citizen, immigrated from the Republic of South Africa seven years ago. At that time I was proud to choose the Canadian democracy as my way of life. But somehow I now feel cheated and sadly cynical. My visions of freedom and human rights have been shattered.

I understand that the reasons for these mail openings is put down to post office and national security. But is our nation so insecure as to impose this type outright amorality on the common people? Surely we have all been taught as little children that opening mail other than one's own and damaging property belonging to others is not only inhuman, but unChristian and undemocratic as well.

With another election about to hit us I strongly urge a good look at what really goes on in our post offices. Human rights is the issue here, and without the dignity of the rights that each one of us deserves, there can be little hope for understanding or trust or peace in today's world. Something has got to be done, soon! — Nicolette deVries, Sooke.

Election test

One of your correspondents (Times, Jan. 26) quotes a friend's question: "Do you realize that the coming federal election will be an intelligence test for the Canadian voters?"

Indeed it will. Intelligence tests used in schools and in many learning and business institutions are usually based not on difficult technical information, but on ability to make reasonable choices to problems often indicated in short sentences, true or false or multiple choice statements.

Not too many voters could even try to answer complicated questions about Petrocan, or the possibility of safe use of nuclear power for energy, because these questions require the very specialized knowledge of trained business executives and nuclear physicists, and even those experts don't have, as yet, all the answers.

But the average citizen, free from the influence of polls, advertising, gimmicks and slogans, can surely see that we cannot go on the merry way of wasting natural and human resources plunging deeper and deeper into international debt, and just talking bravely about Canadian-owned, Canadian-managed enterprises, when most of what we actually produce doesn't even pay the interest on the money we owe to our creditors.

What is even worse is that some of these creditors can, by threats of cancelling lucrative contracts or cutting down their imports from us, influence our foreign policy, thus in fact imposing a limit to our precious freedom.

As your correspondent does say, we need to exercise our franchise "on the side of intelligence and common sense". It is the only way to pass the test and, for Canada's sake, let us hope we will! — E. I. Lattes, 432-200 Dallas Rd.

Credit of all

To the credit of all Canadian politicians, the publicizing of freeing six American embassy staff from Iran, which jeopardizes the remaining hostages in Iranian hands, was an American (media) decision.

The challenge of the 1980s

We've got to keep those visitors coming

By Barbara McLintock and Leslie Yates

There's always lots to see in our year-round temperate climate

Like bees to clover, tourists are attracted to Victoria. The problem is that Victoria, like clover, only blossoms in the spring and summer. The challenge facing the tourist industry is to find a way to make Victoria blossom year round without destroying the garden in the process.

A sharp downturn in the North American economy seems the only threat to Greater Victoria's number one industry. Steady growth in the amount of tourist dollars left behind in the last three years offers reason for optimism about the 1980s.

After a slump in the mid-1970s, visitor spending has been increasing at about 12 per cent a year. As close as anyone can estimate, about 2.5 million visitors last year rattled the cash registers of local merchants to the tune of $220 million. The number of vistors to Victoria last year was two percentage points above the provincial average.

Chain reaction

As much as some locals may find it frustrating to be stuck in traffic behind California or Saskatchewan licence plates, a good percentage of those locals are either directly or indirectly supported by those visitors. By the time ripple or 'multiplier effect' is accounted for, economists find: for every $10,000 spent, one job is created; every dollar spent results in further transactions worth 50 cents; every dollar spent means 21 cents in government revenue.

Despite measures such as the restoration of Crystal Gardens and the proposed face lifting of Chinatown, it seems the best hope for tourism growth is to capitalize on Victoria's year-round temperate climate. And to do that the people promoting tourism have two main goals: to find ways to lengthen the tourist season and improve access to southern Vancouver Island.

Victoria is rapidly nearing the point of summer saturation. Hotel accommodation is tight, and the facilities for those camping and travelling in motorhomes are even scarcer.

Mel Cooper, past president of the Chamber of Commerce, sees broadening the visitor base as the catalyst to improving transportation to the Island. And Arne Lane, who owns the local wax museum and is a partner in several others around the world, says the convention centre planned for the Inner Harbor will be one of the stepping stones to drawing more off-season visitors. Although the province has promised $6.2 million of the estimated $8-$10 million cost of the centre, the federal government has yet to make a commitment. Nevertheless, Lane expects to see it built within two years.

With the capability of seating 1,600 people and feeding 1,200, Lane estimates that in its first year of operation the centre will bring in an additional $37 million to the community — and that's before the multiplier effect goes to work. He says he knows of financiers ready to build four or five more hotels in the city hoping to capitalize on convention centre business and an expanding tourist trade.

Those hotels, which are in various planning stages, will add an estimated 350 rooms to a total of 3,570 in the area. It will be the first addition to the city's total room complement in five years.

The convention centre will not only bring in additional retail dollars year round; it is also expected that people coming on business trips will see that Victoria is a worthwhile place to visit on a return trip with the family.

A virtually untapped source of winter tourism revenue is fall and winter sport fishing. Lane believes the convention centre and upgrading of the Inner Harbor to include tourist access to Fisherman's Wharf will increase the demand for fishing charters.

Bob Wright, owner of Oak Bay Marina and several tourist-related enterprises, says the number of requests he receives for information on fishing charter boats is increasing every year. "With the proper promotion southern Vancouver Island could become a winter mecca, not only for some of the best salmon fishing in the world, but also for the amateur scuba diver." He also notes that few other cities in Canada offer year-round golf.

Marketing and promotion of winter vacations in Victoria are problems. Victoria benefits from considerable advertising done by the provincial government and the 'Blitzes' to other cities sponsored by the tourist bureau. Lane complains that local governments donate only $26,000 a year to the tourist promotion effort. "Edmonton spends $390,000 annually. This city should be spending 10 times what it does."

Another oft-heard tourist trade argument is which comes first: more tourists or better transportation. It appears that transportation is winning.

CP Air is now applying for a licence to renew its flights between the Pat Bay Airport and Vancouver. The stonewall that has faced local authorities over upgrading and expanding terminal and landing facilities at Pat Bay has finally been cracked.

The federal government has announced it will add radar to improve the airport's ability to handle air traffic in adverse weather conditions. Mel Cooper believes that with continued pressure, expansion of the terminal can't be too far in the future.

In addition, Cooper, who sits on the board of directors of Air West, says that sometime in the early 1980s the company will establish an air-bus shuttle between Victoria and Vancouver.

Enlarge airport

Improving air transportation is important because it means large numbers of people can be brought in and because increasing fuel costs over the next decade will see major changes in the way people travel.

At the moment the Pat Bay airport doesn't have the runway or terminal space to handle large passenger jets, which means people arriving from North American and the Pacific Rim countries must first land in Vancouver and either transfer to smaller planes or come by road and ferry.

Cooper says the package tour, incorporating Victoria with other cities such as San Francisco and Los Angeles, will increase. "It will become the most economical way to travel. Victoria will have to be ready for it."

Both Cooper and Lane agree that higher energy costs and fuel shortages are not likely to have an adverse effect on Victoria's tourist industry. As visitors begin to give up the automobile in the 1980s, buses will become a key transportation method after the tourist has arrived. They say the city must respond with a larger downtown transportation centre and the Urban Transit Authority is looking for a terminal site.

The effects of broadening the tourist season are already being seen in the Victoria employment and immigration office. Ben Bowes, a community liaison officer with the federal ministry, says that last year for the first time Victoria's peak employment period was extended for 2½ weeks into the fall. He believes that even with the reluctance of young Canadians to take hotel and restaurant related jobs, expanding the tourist season has the largest potential for slicing a winter unemployment rate that is traditionally two points above the national average.

Although promoters are generally optimistic about the city's tourist potential, they are aware of possible resident unease. People like Peter Pollen, a former mayor of the city whose reign in the mid-'70s still brings back anguished memories for some Chamber of Commerce members, is afraid the enthusiasm of local entrepreneurs may destroy the very things that attracted them to the city in the first place: "Tourism and quality of life should grow together, but I'm afraid Victoria is being turned into Niagara Falls, a lot of low-class, unplanned tourist development."

Lane says the backlash to tourist development is dissipating as residents become more aware of just how tightly knit their standard of living is to the couple wheeling the California licence plates through town. Since the days when Pollen was mayor, most businessmen agree that their relationship with city hall has improved dramatically.

The Chamber of Commerce is hoping to set up a committee to make recommendations on how to make Victoria more beautiful. Cooper says 'Taking Care of Number One' has to be the priority. Protect and enhance, he says, should be the watch words.

. . . and find a cushion

Victoria's economic base has changed in the last decade.

A swing from manufacturing and industrial enterprises has been evident in employment statistics. The gap has been filled by a growing tourist industry and the spinoff retail and service industries. But that has created a potential for economic hardship.

If the volume of summer visitors plummeted, Victoria's economy would suffer. Government would still be pumping $200 million a year into the local economy through about 14,000 pay-cheques alone. But Victoria has little economic cushion to soften any lapse in tourism.

Throughout the 1970s, Victoria has relied on its immediate strengths. Riding the tide of a growing worldwide interest in travelling, the city prospered and should continue to do so. But it has ignored economic diversification.

At a time when Vancouver Island communities such as Nanaimo and Port Hardy are cashing in on industrial development, Greater Victoria's industry has, if anything, declined. Anyone developing a manufacturing base on an island faces many drawbacks, the biggest being transportation costs to get goods to market. But Victoria, as far as location goes, is no worse off than Nanaimo. Victoria has the advantages of being a 'desirable place to live', the largest centre with the broadest work-force on the Island, and it has a functional harbor and port. The difference seems to be an attitude toward development.

Jack Baines works for the Federal Development Bank, organizing counselling assistance for small businessmen. He says that to project 10 years into the future a banker would look 10 years into the past and try to develop a trend. Applying that economic dictum to diversification does not foster optimism for Victoria.

Ogden Point used to be Victoria's industrial heartland. But a paint company, bottling firm, plastics operation and shipyard have either moved to the Mainland or folded. And now, says Baines, the oil tank farm in the Inner Harbor is being forced to move with no site alternative as yet. "Nanaimo will welcome those jobs." He says other centres go out and sell their town as a place for industry to locate, but here there is a mentality that discourages primary producers.

A study done by Statistics Canada shows that between 1961 and 1977 the percentage of the Victoria work-force employed by primary industries and manufacturing has decreased. The most noticeable drop was in manufacturing — which used to employ 11 per cent but now provides jobs for only seven or eight per cent.

The study also shows that government, including the defence department, is not growing in relation to the work-force. It now employs six per cent less. However, there has been a 10 per cent increase in the numbers working for small businesses, hotels, schools and hospitals. Tourism and service industries are creating most of the new jobs for a work-force that has grown to about 100,000 from 60,000 in 1961.

The danger of lopsided growth has been recognized by local governments and the Chamber of Commerce.

Bob Wheaton of Wheaton Construction is spearheading the chamber's ambition to organize economic development promotion for Victoria. He cites the possiblity of a prolonged mid-summer ferry strike and the resulting disruption to the tourist trade as an example of just how vulnerable Victoria is as a one-industry town.

Wheaton agrees up to a point that Victoria's parochial attitude stands in the way of attracting industry. But he and his chamber colleagues also are fussy. They don't want noisy, smoke-stack factories such as that associated with the pulp and paper industry.

Victoria should be a logical place for head offices and high technology industry

Wheaton says an economic shift from eastern to western Canada is starting and that Victoria should be able to attract head offices and high technology industry. "This is a logical place. It provides a quality lifestyle for executives."

Because transportation costs to mainland markets are high, Victoria could be suitable for industries whose products have a high value to weight ratio. Wheaton says such factories could be built in showcase fashion and not detract from the small scale, pastoral quality of the region.

But if this ideal is to become a reality in the next decade, problems of promotion and availability of land must be overcome. Cedric Steele, president of the chamber, sums up the magnitude of the latter difficulty: "We should be planning industrial parks now - the last one (Royal Oak) took 16 years to get off the ground."

Resident opposition to ventures such as the Royal Oak industrial park epitomizes the frustration felt by people like Wheaton. "People move here because it is a glorious place to live and retire. Naturally they want to preserve it. But the city must have balanced economic growth to maintain services." He says community groups in Victoria have perfected a "knee-jerk, not in my backyard, routine."

Some of the pressure to obtain suitably zoned land has been relieved by the provincial government's plan to develop research parks adjacent to the University of Victoria and the Institute of Ocean Sciences. But it is clear that the burden of providing industrial land rests with local governments.

While it is premature to expect Victoria to become the Switzerland of the Pacific, a lot of energy is being spent on that goal. The chamber is negotiating with the regional district for the responsiblity of economic development. Wheaton is convinced that if the right salesman could be put out in the field, he would produce results.

Wheaton also notes that transportation services, while important for tourism, are also vital to improving economic diversification. As pressure increases to upgrade facilities at the Pat Bay Airport, he says, the Inner Harbor should not be overlooked. He envisions a one large float plane terminal in the Harbor, one that could be used by businessmen either flying their own float planes or who want to charter.

Victoria is not completely devoid of indigenous strength. The University of Victoria, for example, adds sizable breadth to the local economy and it has significant economic potential. UVic tends to be taken for granted, but outside of government, defence and tourist spending, it is the single biggest employer in Greater Victoria. UVic's 1,500 full-time and 2,000 part-time employees earn more than $25 million annually. Four years ago it was estimated that UVic's regional impact (combining student spending with its functions as an employer and a local buyer of goods and services) was in the order of $60 million.

UVic's president, Howard Petch, expects the university to add engineering and business faculties in the next decade, drawing 700 to 1,000 more students, and contributing even more to the local economy. He also notes that the university is becoming more of a tourist attraction every year.

Tax bill order 'cheap politics'

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber says a B.C. government order that municipal tax notices include a statement that taxes would be higher save for the province's financial contribution is "shoddy and cheap politics".

"Why didn't they do it three years ago when the program was introduced?" Barber said Tuesday.

"The answer is that three years ago the government wasn't in serious trouble — this year they most certainly are.

The cabinet order passed Jan. 17 says "a demand notice mailed under Section 374 of the (Municipal) Act after the coming into force of this regulation shall contain the following statement containing a percentage calculated under section 2 of this regulation.

"Last year without provincial government revenue sharing your general municipal taxes would have increased by (a blank space follows) per cent to provide similar levels of service."

The regulation change was the brainchild of Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm, who said in an interview, "revenue sharing is an extremely good program that the people don't understand at all."

He said the public should not only know where their taxes are going, but also what makes up the total budgets that municipalities spend.

"The only way they can tell that is to determine where and what the revenues are. So this is really a way of telling the people where at least a portion of the revenues are coming from and what percentage of the total tax bill that portion represents."

Asked if he feels some might view the statement as propaganda, Vander Zalm said: "I suppose some would view it as that and I'm certain that it will be labelled as such.

"It is propaganda in a sense. As I said, few people really understand revenue sharing. It is a good program. It's a program which has been tremendously received by municipal officials everywhere. They understand it — at least I think they do — but the people don't."

Barber said: "The municipalities are being instructed to subsidize Social Credit. I believe the bill for this offensive little scheme should be sent care of Mr. Bernie Smith, Social Credit party."

Smith is the president of the B.C. Social Credit party.

The fund from which the revenue sharing is derived is created from six per cent of renewable resources, nonrenewable resources and sales tax revenues, along with one corporate tax point and one personal income tax point.

This year's tax forms will make no mention of the revenues provided to municipalities from the sale of natural gas.

PCB contact not serious: firm

An NDP MLA's claim Tuesday that the health of workers who had serviced a transformer at a Stewart mine could be threatened by exposure to PCB drew a rebuttal today from a spokesman for the company.

Victoria MLA Gordon Hanson said Tuesday that 15 workers at the Granduc mining operation north of Stewart had been seriously exposed to PCBs when they serviced a transformerthat had been mislabelled "oil-filled."

He also suggested that a number of the workers servicing it had been up to their elbows in the device's coolant liquid.

Granduc spokesman Don Coghill said as far as he knows, any spillage was wiped up.

The material used to wipe up the contaminated oil, as well as the clothes of employees who came in contact with it, was wrapped in plastic bags, put into a barrel and shipped to Washington for burning.

PCB can only be destroyed by incineration at high heat.

As for the workers who came into contact with the PCB, Coghill said that an Environment Canada official had recommended the workers wash their hands well.

Coghill said he had no knowledge of any worker having put his arms in the contaminated oil up to his elbows and added the company's medical advisers have been asked to look into the matter.

Coghill said Finning Tractor and Equipment Co. Ltd. was asked by Canada Wide Mines (the proper name of the Granduc operation) to acquire a second-hand electric transformer for the mine's power plant.

It hasn't yet been determined where the transformer came from, but it is now believed that at some time in the past it contained PCBs, a common transformer coolant now banned in the U.S. and Canada.

The eight-ton transformer arrived in Stewart from Ontario in December, just before the mine was starting up.

Tests on the transformer coolant oil for electrical properties didn't check out, and it was suspected there was water in the oil.

A sample was sent to a B.C. Hydro lab in Vancouver for testing, and for some reason it was decided to check for PCBs.

The scale used apparently only registers to 5,000 parts per million, Coghill said.

Hanson claimed the tests showed PCB in excess of 11,000 parts per million.

The test results were received by mine officials last Friday, Coghill said, but the transformer had already been shipped off to Westinghouse in Prince George.

Westinghouse, informed of the PCB contamination of the coolant, promptly handed the transformer back to Finning.

When mine officials heard of the PCB problem, they immediately informed the Terrace office of the provincial waste management branch, the federal environmental protection service and others.

Hanson demanded Tuesday that Environment Minister Stephen Rogers determine how a transformer filled with a banned toxic substance could be shipped across the country.

He also asked Health Minister Rafe Mair to have the 15 exposed workers be tested by health authorities.

WARNING

PROTECT YOUR FAMILY FROM CARBON MONOXIDE POISONING!

Carbon monoxide poisoning is a very real hazard in many homes throughout British Columbia. This odorless, invisible killer is produced when combustion takes place without a proper supply of air. With the recent drive to conserve heat and energy, many homes have been made much more air-tight, and with the combination of a burning fireplace, a gas-burning furnace and the normal compliment of appliances and exhaust fans in operation, a potentially lethal situation can occur. Gas furnaces normally have their own air supply, however, it is often not of sufficient size to supply the additional air demands of fireplaces and exhaust fans. A fireplace should have its own air supply duct or a window should be opened in the room where a fireplace is being used. Don't take chances—learn about the hazards of carbon monoxide . . . have a qualified heating expert check your home for its air supply needs.

No evidence of lice after 300 book off

KITSAULT (CP) — A Prince Rupert doctor says he found no signs that construction workers in this isolated northwestern B.C. community are suffering from an outbreak of scabies or lice.

About 300 union members refused to report to work Tuesday because some were complaining of rashes and itching, the two most common symptoms of the parasites.

Dr. David Scruton said he found no signs of infection on the four men he examined at the Amax Northwest Mining Co. Ltd. molybdenum mine site 160 kilometres north of Prince Rupert.

While it was possible some of the remaining 296 members of the B.C. and Yukon Territory Building and Construction Trades Council were infected, Scruton said he believes he examined all the men complaining of rashes and itching.

Scabies is a contagious skin disease caused by an mite which bores beneath the skin in fingers and creases of the body. The mite causes intense itching, scratching and a rash. Lice are slightly larger insects which live on the skin surface, especially in the pubic region, and are usually transmitted sexually.

Amax spokesman Rick Killam said the company was told about eight to 10 individuals may have scabies.

"The company will do whatever is reasonable to get the situation under control," Killam said. "This sort of thing can be transmitted from person to person through such things as borrowed towels."

Bid for RCV extended

Saanich council gave the financially-troubled Racquet Club of Victoria another break on Monday when it agreed to extend until Feb. 20 an offer to purchase the facility.

The municipality's offer to assume the club's $850,000 mortgage debt expired two weeks ago.

The club's shareholders will meet Feb. 19 to discuss Saanich's offer and two other proposals. One is from a private Vancouver developer and the other a bid by the leaseholders to raise enough money to keep the club operating.

In other business, council deferred until Feb. 19 action on proposed amendments to council's procedure bylaw which would see council meet each week with committee meetings being held on the same night.

Anti-pipeliners hope for funds

Former Liberal MP David Anderson said today he hopes the federal and provincial governments will fund the B.C. Wildlife Federation's appearance at pipeline hearings in Washington State.

Hearings of the Energy Facility Siting Council have resumed in Olympia and will continue until June.

There will also be federal hearings by the corps of engineers in Washington State.

Anderson said he has been pressing for more than half a year to get the Conservative government to make that decision.

Anderson is the spokesman for the federation, an official intervener.

"With hotel bills and travel these hearings are an expensive process," Anderson said.

Anderson's comments came after External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald told a University of Victoria audience Tuesday that Canada will be represented at the pipeline hearings.

MacDonald, pressed by students to explain why Ottawa has not been active in the hearings, concluded her response by saying "we'll be there."

She did not elaborate.

Anderson said the federal government cannot at this late date become an intervener but could assist some organization that has intervener status.

Anderson said that if he can persuade the various U.S. regulatory agencies to put tough restrictions on pipeline and port construction, the finished product might prove too expensive for private U.S. investors and the whole project would have to be abandoned.

Then the Trans Mountain and Foothills alternatives would be back in the running.

Canada to join U.S. and Britain in two-digit inflation

MONTREAL (UPC) — Canada will join the United States and Britain with double-digit inflation in 1980 and record a zero growth rate under the effects of a U.S. recession and higher international oil prices, the Bank of Montreal says.

In its annual "Outlook" report, the bank says major oil producing nations will enjoy another $30 billion in revenue this year, swelling their current accounts surplus to $100 billion at the expense of consumer nations.

But the bank warned the major burden will be borne by the developing countries, which will not be able to depend so heavily on loans from industrialized world.

"While a crisis situation has not yet been reached," it added, "clearly the potential of this problem is accelerating."

In an address to some 300 businessmen, bank senior vice president Charles Arentschildt said "all the ingredients of an unfavorable year in economic performance" exist and "these are not cheering prospects as we enter the 1980s."

The bank's senior economist Stephen Browne said 1980 would be a "very weak year indeed" in the United States, which recorded in 1979 the worst inflation rate — 12.6 percent — since World War II. Britain's inflation rate would rise from 13.5 percent to about 16 percent compared to 11 percent in Canada, up from 9.8 percent in 1979.

By the end of 1979, which saw the international community spend an additional $20 billion on oil imports, personal savings in the United States dropped "pretty close to rock-bottom."

"In sum, therefore, we go along with the consensus view that 1980 will be a recession year in the states," Browne said.

But while most U.S. forecasters have predicted American Gross National Product will drop by between one and two percent, the bank said Canada's GNP would only drop by one half of one percent.

In Canada, "the only relatively bright spot" will be a 3 percent increase in business investment, as inventories are depleted, consumer spending rises only one percent and key industries like lumber and auto parts suffer from a U.S. recession.

"This adds up to a 'no growth' year for the Canadian economy," Browne said. "Real GNP is expected to stay at its 1979 level."

But Canada's exports of natural gas should reduce the nation's balance of payments deficit by $600 million for an overall current accounts deficit of about $6 billion, up from $5.5 billion in 1979, the bank said.

company reports

Bethlehem

Bethlehem Copper Corp. has reported net earnings of $13,724,000 or $2.17 a share for 1979, compared with $4,449,000 or 70.4 cents a share the previous year.

The company said in a news release fourth quarter earnings were $4,294,000 or 67.9 cents a share, compared with $1,657,00 or 26.2 cents a share for the same period in 1978.

Bryan J. Reynolds, company president, said that throughout the year metal markets continued to grow to produce the substantial increase in net earnings.

Reynolds said ore reserves stand at 63 million tons, sufficient for about nine years production at current output. He said some potential for expansion of the reserves has been discovered during the year.

Inco

Inco Ltd. has reported a 1979 profit of $141.7 million on total sales of $2.49 billion, almost double the earnings of $77.8 million on sales of $2.08 billion the previous fiscal year.

"Major factors contributing to the increase in earnings ... were higher prices for primary metals and formed metal products and a tax change in the United Kingdom," the company said.

Inco delivered 394 million pounds of nickle last year, a 5 percent increase over 1978 levels, and 129 million pounds of copper, down 43 percent.

Trade deficit with Mexico a coming trend

MEXICO CITY (CP) — A growing trade imbalance in Mexico's favor may become an irreversible trend in the 1980s when Mexican crude oil starts flowing into Eastern Canadian refineries, says Canada's ambassador to Mexico.

Claude Charland said in an interview that the value of Canadian imports from Mexico, including hidden imports such as fruits and vegetables purchased from middlemen in the United States, has doubled since 1975 and reached $184 million in 1978.

The figure for the first half of 1979 exceeded $108.6 million.

He said Mexican imports of Canadian goods such as vehicle parts, asbestos, wheat, dairy products, railway equipment and computers amounted to $229 million in 1978 but dropped to $88.1 million for the first half of 1979.

"I think we may be facing an irreversible trend here," Charland said. "As soon as we begin importing Mexican crude into Canada the balance will be altered even further."

The 46-year-old former assistant deputy industry minister said he expects the first 50,000-barrel-a-day shipment of oil will be sent to Canada later this year. The 100,000-barrel mark specified in the two countries' energy co-operation agreement last year will be hit early next year.

Although the agreement will not be signed until Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo visits Canada later this year, both countries have agreed to consider it already in effect.

Augustin Barrios Gomez, Mexico's ambassador in Ottawa, has made similar statements in recent weeks but says it depends on the 1981 production levels, expected to be set and announced in the near future.

The price Canada will pay for the oil, which will replace that flowing into Quebec and the Atlantic provinces from unstable sources in the Middle East, has not yet been set. But on Jan. 2 the state-owned Petroleos Mexicanos company raised the price of its light oil to $32 (U.S.) a barrel from $24.60. Heavier-grade oil jumped to $28 a barrel from $20.70.

Although Mexico is not a member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, its prices generally march in step with those set by OPEC. They may rise again now that Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and some other OPEC members have raised their prices, which vary between $24 and $34 a barrel.

But the almost-inevitable trade imbalance can be offset.

During the interview in his office, overlooking the broad, traffic-choked Avenida Reforma, Charland said the Mexican government plans to use the income from its 700,000-barrel-a-day export sales to finance an ambitious industrial development plan.

A 1979 analysis by embassy trade counsellor Tom MacDonald said that, among other things, the $40-billion plan seeks to eradicate the appalling poverty many Mexicans are born into and slow population growth.

Mexico City's population is currently 14 million and is expected to top the 32-million mark by the year 2000, while the country's total population will more than double to about 160 million.

The embassy report quoted Mexican government studies which showed that to accommodate this fantastic increase, an average 600,000 new jobs must be created each year between 1978 and 1982, over one million a year for 1983-86 and 1.5 million each year until 2000.

Industrial decentralization is also being encouraged. About 50 per cent of all Mexican industries now are concentrated in this sprawling, smog-cloaked city. The remainder are located in the northern cities of Monterrey and Guadalajara.

While the government predicts the plan will increase the total export of goods and services from an anticipated $22.5 billion in 1982 to $84.3 billion in 1990, it also forecast that imports during the same period would rise from $21.4 billion to $102.6 billion.

And Canadian businessmen, who have hitherto had little to do with Mexico because of their traditional emphasis on trade with the U.S., have been given an opportunity to cash in on it.

The Mexican government, in an effort to offset its own heavy economic links with the juggernaut across the Rio Grande, has granted Canada status as a privileged trading partner — the fifth after Spain, France, Brazil and Japan.

Meeting cancelled, Kempf under fire

NELSON (CP) — Jack Kempf, chairman of the B.C. legislature's committee on Crown corporations, should resign for cancelling a meeting of the committee for the third consecutive time, a New Democratic Party MLA and committee member said Tuesday.

Lorne Nicolson, MLA for Nelson-Creston, said the six NDP members on the committee would try to vote Kempf out at a future date.

"There hasn't been one single meeting of the committee since the legislature left Victoria July 31," Nicolson said. "Now there is no way we can have a meeting before the house reconvenes Feb. 29."

The cancelled Feb. 14 closed-door session was to have discussed safety on B.C. ferries.

"He's (Kempf) shown a total disregard for the democratic process," Nicolson said. "He's afraid we'll vote him out of the chair for his incompetence, and that is what we intend to do."

The MLA said that while there still are enough members for a quorum, the government side of the 15-member committee has been weakened because three members have been appointed to the provincial cabinet.

Settlement secret

VANCOUVER (CP) — Lilja Arkolainen-Kaiser was divorced from her industrialist husband, Edgar Kaiser Jr. Tuesday with terms of any financial settlement cloaked in secrecy.

Lilja, 36, a blonde former airline stewardess, won her decree on grounds of adultery following a brief appearance before county court Judge A.A.W. Macdonell, sitting as a local judge of B.C. Supreme Court.

Kaiser, 38, chairman of Vancouver-based Kaiser Resources Ltd., did not appear in court but John Steeves, his lawyer, and Wayne Moore, representing Mrs. Kaiser, said it was agreed the amount of settlement would not be disclosed.

Pair charged

SALMON ARM (CP) — Two Salmon Arm men were charged with attempted murder in provincial court following a shooting incident at a house in this Interior community.

Buddy Crampton, 22, and Kevin Roberts, 18, were released on $500 bail each and no date for their next court appearance was set.

Police said the incident occurred shortly before midnight Monday night when two men entered a home. One man held an unidentified 27-year-old man at gunpoint while the other beat the victim. A shotgun discharged during the beating and the victim was slightly wounded.

One man fled the scene and was later arrested at his home, while residents of the house subdued a second man until police arrived.

Developers sue

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two land development companies have started court action to prevent 642 acres of Fraser Valley land they want to develop from being returned to the agricultural land reserve.

Gloucester Properties Ltd. and Chichester Properties Ltd. have filed a writ in B.C. Supreme Court. The companies claim there was a conspiracy between cabinet members, the environment and land use committee and the B.C. Land Commission to prevent use of land for an industrial park.

The property was the centre of a political storm last fall when it was disclosed it had been removed from the agricultural land reserve. After protests from environmentalists and other municipalities, the land was frozen again pending reclassification.

The companies are seeking to prohibit the land commission from applying to have the land added to the Central Fraser Valley reserve plan.

WCB claims up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Workers' Compensation Board injury claims increased 17 per cent in 1979 over 1978, the board said Tuesday.

Last year's total claims reached 188,000. There were 163 deaths on the job in 1979, up from 152 in 1978.

Board spokesman Liz Wright could not explain the increases. She said the work force increased only three per cent last year, and there was no single industry distorting the trend.

Solar course a first

NANAIMO (CP) — Canada's first full-time energy technology program will begin at Nanaimo's Malaspina College next September.

Education Minister Brian Smith said the two-year program leading to a diploma will train technicians to design and supervise the installation of both conventional and solar heating units as well as energy-saving devices.

More than 40 students have already applied.

Energy policy falls short of mark, engineers claim

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Association of Professional Engineers of British Columbia says it is concerned about some energy issues not covered in the new provincial energy policy announced Monday by Energy Minister Bob McClelland.

The association, representing more than 9,000 professional engineers in the province, feels the government should have gone further regarding conservation of energy.

The group submitted its own report on energy to the government in October, 1978, and one of the recommendations was for a provincial energy policy.

"The statement about conservation and using smaller automobiles is admirable," said Norm Johnson, president of the association. "However, the association feels the government should have gone further.

"For example: the lowering of thermostats in government and other buildings; greater utilization of automatic systems to control energy use in commerical and industrial establishments to conserve energy.

"There should also be more initiative for support of rapid transit and the encouragement of greater use of rail transport for shipment of goods around the province.

Johnson said the group would like to see some of the revenue generated from the sale of natural gas and petroleum rights earmarked to develop new sources of energy rather than going into general revenue.

He added, however, that the decision not to consider the option of nuclear power in the energy policy is disappointing.

"While the association does not necessarily support nuclear power," Johnson said, "the option should be considered in any long-range energy policy and not dismissed without discussion."

NANAIMO — ALBERNI: No matter who they're voting for they are unenthusiastic about their choice and some are unhappy about having to march to the polls again so soon

First of a series

Nobody betting against NDP's Miller

ALSTINE ...Conservative — McKINNON ...Liberal — MILLER ...NDP

ELECTION '80 THE ISLAND

One of his opponents makes reference at a Nanaimo-Alberni all-candidates meeting to "when Ted gets back to Ottawa" and a titter goes through the audience.

But there are no hearty guffaws as if the politically mixed crowd senses that a victory nod to the NDP's Ted Miller three week's before election day is not that outrageous.

Last year's May 22 election was the 37-year-old teacher's first crack at federal politics and he won by a comfortable, 4,819-vote margin.

Scott Van Alstine, running for the first time as a Tory candidate, came second and former Liberal MP Hugh Anderson was third, more than 6,000 votes behind the Conservative.

Anderson is not running this time around. Cecile McKinnon, a housewife from Port Alberni, is representing the Liberals. Van Alstine, a 37-year-old lawyer, is running again for the Tories.

The general feeling voiced by a number of people during a two-day tour of the Nanaimo-Alberni riding is that Miller is a shoo-in again.

Even some who won't be voting for him make the concession.

Another impression skimmed from interviews with the riding's inhabitants is that regardless of who they vote for, they're not too enthusiastic about their choice.

Some are confused as to who to vote for and still others are angry that they should be having to vote at all so soon after the last election.

Harry MacGougan, who has lived in Nanaimo since 1973, says there is no doubt how the election is going to go in the riding which slices through Vancouver Island's midsection.

"This is strong NDP country, has been for years."

He works for an Alberta oil drilling company and because there's no work during the winter months he is back home with time to talk about things like elections.

He says people aren't as interested in the election as they were last time around.

"Most of the time you don't hear them talking about it."

(This impression took a beating later that day when an all-candidates' meeting in Nanaimo draws a much larger crowd than expected.)

Both MacGougan and his retired friend James Aucoin, who lives in the same trailer park on the outskirts of Nanaimo, believe Trudeau will get back in.

"It was that 18-cent gas tax, that's what killed him," Aucoin says of Conservative leader Joe Clark. "If it had been done four or five cents at a time . . .

"He did it too quick and people got scared."

Aucoin says Clark needs more experience before leading the country.

Both said they like Trudeau because at least he speaks his mind, whereas Clark, in their opinion, acts like a robot, as if told what to say and how to say it.

Both men mention the good stretch Nanaimo appears to be going through now, the way things are booming.

Mayo Forest Products Ltd. last month opened a new $16.5 million sawmill.

The huge Duke Point industrial site is still in the works, promising to provide jobs and an economic boost to the community.

Heading north on the Island Highway out of Nanaimo, there are more shopping centres going up or being expanded and signs proclaim others planned for the near future.

Last year's federal election was the first one for Nanaimo-Alberni, a new riding carved out of the old Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and Comox-Alberni ridings.

The new riding is a grab-bag of area types, including the populated Nanaimo-Parksville-Qualicum Beach stretch, industrial Port Alberni, where the pulp-mill smoke and smell stamps it as a working man's town, and the quiet, out-of-the-way places like Ahousat and Hot Springs Cove.

There are also the fishing villages — Bamfield, Ucluelet, Tofino — and the farming areas of Coombs-Hilliers-Errington.

Sandy Wiebe, manager of a home for the mentally retarded, has lived in Port Alberni for three years, voted Liberal last time but admits to being confused this time around.

"I don't know what I'm going to do;" she says while loading groceries into her car at a shopping centre.

"I don't like Trudeau, I don't like Clark and I don't trust Broadbent."

She says she hopes Clark doesn't win because she finds him too wishy-washy.

A man slinging beer at one of Alberni's pubs says he hopes Trudeau gets back in.

"He's done some bad things but he's done some good as well.

"He's stuck up for the working man but Clark is selling us out to the Americans, letting them walk all over him."

Port Alberni is McKinnon's stomping ground.

She is the mother of eight children, has lived in the city for 24 years and has a record of involvement in community activities.

She also ran unsuccessfully for the Liberals in the 1975 provincial election. But she will likely have a tough time gaining much ground on Miller, who swept the area in the May 22 election.

She is not too well known in the Nanaimo area and appears to be conducting a fairly low-key campaign. There were no McKinnon signs to be seen, for example, whereas Miller and Van Alstine banners were sprinkled everywhere.

Ken Castle is manager of the Park Sands Resort in Parksville and one of those interviewed who supports Clark and would like to see him given another chance.

Of Clark's policy of raising gas prices, Castle said: "It's something that is going to have to come whether we like it or not."

Mike Woods, owner of a Nanaimo sporting goods store, says Canada's political leadership "is getting to be a bit of a farce."

"There is no political party with any brains that is going to make any rash decisions," he says, explaining that politicians are afraid to make needed but unpopular moves.

"They don't give a damn about the country. All they care about is their $60,000 salaries and sticking around long enough to collect their pensions.

"I'd love to see somebody get in with enough balls to do what has to be done.

"I think we need someone who is willing to sacrifice himself, to do what has to be done even it means only a one-year or one-term shot."

One of the problems, Woods says, is that the unions are running the country.

He refers to the Duke Point industrial project which was frozen until last month because of a union jursidictional battle.

Woods says his wife makes $11.90 an hour working at a Safeway store, a wage he thinks is very high for the type of work she does.

"I will never make $12 an hour in here," he says, making a sweep with his hand of the small store. "And I've got all the bills to pay."

He too admits that Nanaimo is NDP country and "it will never change."

Miller is confident in an interview that he can pull in even more votes this time than in last May's contest. His canvassers tell him the outlook is good.

At the all-candidates meeting he emphasizes the need for Canadians to get better control of the fishing industry. He complains that there is no "Made-in-Canada" manufacturing policy.

Van Alstine says he is better known this time around and that is helping. He also says the response from people is generaly more positive.

Whether that will translate into more votes remains to be seen.

He claims the Duke Point project is an issue this time around because he says Miller hasn't become involved enough to see that the development goes ahead.

There are three other candidates in the Feb. 18 contest.

Allan Bezanson, a laborer from Nanaimo, is representing the Marxist-Leninists; Gary Swann, a Port Alberni farmer, the Communist party; and Frank Coffey of Salt Spring Island, is running for the Rhinoceros party.

None of the three is expected to have much of an impact on the electorate.

Parents win on overpass

A pedestrian overpass on the proposed McKenzie Avenue extension at Carey Road has been recommended to Saanich council by its public works committee.

Aldermen gave in Tuesday to pressure from parents, school principals, neighboring residents and Greater Victoria school board who are worried about safety of children attending McKenzie Elementary School. Part of the school's playground will be expropriated.

More than 200 elementary and 100 junior secondary pupils cross the artery at least twice daily, the committee was told.

Residents are still not happy about the $7 million four-lane arterial route planned by the highways department to link more directly the university district and Patricia Bay Highway with Trans-Canada Highway.

Ask the Times

Q. Does "Doc" Severinsen of Johnny Carson's Tonight Show have a PhD in music or some other endeavor or is the "Doc" merely a nickname? L.M.N.

A. As far we can learn Carl H. Severinsen doesn't have a degree. None of the reference books we checked gave any indication of how his nickname came about. The question was asked on Barry Bowman's CFAX show, and some callers claimed the nickname was given Severinsen as a child because his father was a pharmacist. He was called "Little Doc."

VGH doctors should have voice on abortions, says committee

By BRENDA DALGLISH

All doctors practising at Victoria General Hospital should have a say on whether abortions will be performed there, the three members of the hospital's therapeutic abortion committee said Tuesday.

Drs. John Cooper, John Calder and David Ripley told the Times the medical staff should have an input on such a controversial question. They declined to say whether they favor a poll of doctors or a just a general discussion.

A Tuesday meeting of general practitioners on the active VGH staff indicated support for the abortion committee's position stated in a letter to the hospital board Monday.

The letter warned that the board may have acted illegally last week when it agreed to permit Royal Jubilee Hospital's therapeutic abortion committee to rule on abortions at VGH.

Cooper said the abortion committee hasn't decided whether it will take any further action.

The board will discuss the matter with its solicitor soon, board chairman Alan Patterson said.

Cooper said he'd like to see all the doctors on the hospital's staff asked their opinions on the wording of the Criminal Code and on the morality of abortions.

"Doctors have generally avoided this thing. They haven't accepted their responsibility on this," he said.

Cooper said the letter was sent to the board because the committee felt as a matter of principle the board shouldn't circumvent its own properly-appointed committee.

"We felt strongly that they should know what we felt," Cooper said about the committee's decision to protest.

The committee is chosen by the hospital's medical staff and begins working each January. This year as soon as the committee sat it became obvious that, following the wording of the code, it was not prepared to permit the vast majority of abortion applications.

The code states that each hospital can choose to have an abortion committee to hear each application for an abortion. According to the code, abortions can be allowed if continuing the pregnancy would impair the mental or physical health of the mother.

This leaves hospitals free to interpret the law as their appointed abortion committees choose.

14 Trident employees go to Canadair

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A group of employees who lost their jobs last month at Trident Aircraft Ltd. because of a federal government decision ironically have found work with the federal government-owned Canadair Ltd. of Montreal.

Some 14 Trident staff from the 107 laid off when the Sidney company suspended operations on its amphibious Trigull plane went to Canadair on a contract basis for three months.

Derrick Lock of Trident said some have already been at work a week and others started Monday. Trident sent them down as a unit and if and when the company gets back on its feet, they will be called back.

"We've got a good relationship with the Canadair top management," said Lock.

If Trident starts up again soon after the federal election, and Trident needs certain key employees back sooner than the three months are up, Canadair would relinquish them.

Trident has provided the 14 employees with a per diem living rate and a housing allowance while they are at Canadair. They are also earning an equivalent salary to what Trident paid them, Lock said.

"They're not losing anything," he said.

Canadair has plenty of work and the Trident people could probably work 10 to 20 hours a week overtime, he said.

Trident sent a variety of skilled staff, including sheet metal workers, an electrician, some general laborers familiar with aircraft work and lower level technical people.

The exodus has also had the side effect of removing the Trident employees' principal spokesman from the political arena. Trident toolroom foreman Sam Wylie left last weekend to work at Canadair.

He had been active for the last month in leading protests against the Conservatives for pulling the plug on the company.

Canadair is a much larger operation than Trident, with 5,500 employees based at Cartierville airport 10 miles southeast of Montreal. In 35 years it has produced 3,900 aircraft, including its own amphibian, the CL-215 multi-purpose amphibious aircraft.

Lock said the Trident people will probably be working on Canadair's principal products, the Challenger wide-body, long range executive jet, and its water bombers. The executive jet alone has accounted for sales and firm orders which total more than $700 million.

Canadair also has a long-term contract from Boeing of Seattle to produce up to 300 aft fuselage sections of the new 767 passenger jet which could lead to 15 to 20 years' work for an additional 900 employees.

Since 1976 it has been a Crown corporation, although Prime Minister Joe Clark's government has announced plans to try and sell the company.

Canadair has also been used by the Conservatives' opponents here as a successful example of what government subsidies can do in a high technology business like aircraft manufacturing.

Osgoode prof coming here

Prominent law professor Peter Hogg of Osgoode Hall in Toronto will be a visiting educator at University of Victoria starting in January, 1981, UVic has announced.

Meanwhile, Bill Neilson of the UVic law faculty will go to Toronto to teach there for a year starting July 1, 1980.

Three-act all-star play a boring show

DETROIT (CP) — The 32nd National Hockey League all-star game was a three-act play interspaced with plenty of tedium.

Whether the three parts were worth the $15 admission price to the record crowd of 21,002 remains up to the individual.

In the end it was the Prince of Wales all-stars winning by a 6-3 margin over the Clarence Campbell Conference. But that score doesn't do justice to the merits of the game. It was far worse than the score would indicate.

The 32nd game and the fifth which featured the Wales-vs.-Campbell format had a beginning that should have lifted it to a spectators delight — a three-minute standing ovation for Gordie Howe which just about shook every rivet out of place in the new, and still-under-construction, Joe Louis Arena.

That was the first act, and a touching one.

"I was simply overwhelmed," Howe said afterwards. "It's a beautiful feeling and it's also a bit terrifying.

The other two acts were scoring blitzes by the Wales squad.

In the first period they looked as if they would turn the game into a rout with goals by Larry Robinson of Montreal Canadiens and Steve Payne of Minnesota North Stars within a minute and 21 seconds of each other.

That was good enough to set a record for the two fastest goals by a team from the start of the game — the second one occurring at the 4:19 mark.

Both goals were scored against Tony Esposito. Esposito, however lasted just 15:10 into the game when a shot by Howe, one of two good scoring chances he would get, reinjured a sore hand.

Pete Peters came in as Esposito's replacement and was performing steadily if not brilliantly while his mates chiselled their way into a 3-2 lead by the 4:14 mark of the third period.

In between, however, chiefly throughout the second period, the Detroit fans were forced to sit through one of the dullest periods of hockey not only in an all-star game, but any game.

When Kent Nilsson of Atlanta Flames tied the game 2-2 at the 4:14 mark, that shot marked the first one goaltender Don Edwards had to face in the second period. When Edwards was replaced by Gillies Meloche of Minnesota Twins at 9:27 of the period he still had faced just the one shot.

Act three occurred over a span of four minutes and 26 seconds when the Wales squad ripped four goals past Peters to send the game out of reach and Philadelphia Flyers' goaltender into shock.

It marked Peters first loss of the year. During season play the Flyers have won 20 and tied five with Peters in goal.

"There's really no reason for something like that," he said of the four goals. "They just seemed to be knocking them in off the posts and hitting all the corners.

"Technically it still isn't a loss," he said. "This is just an exhibition game. The first two that went by me (by Ron Stackhouse and Craig Hartsburg) both went in off the post and another one deflected in off my pads."

Reggie Leach, who scored one goal and set up another by team-mate Brian Propp for the Campbell Conference, was nonetheless selected as the game's best player.

"I thought the turning point came when (Referee Dave) Newell didn't call a holding penalty in their end. We came close to scoring on that play and then they went right down the ice and scored.

"If we could have scored it would have been 4-2 and maybe we'd have gone on to win."

The guy who almost scored was another Flyer, Rick MacLeish. MacLeish appeared to have a sure goal when he faced an empty net from 15 feet out. His shot, though, somehow went over the net.

"It hit somebody's stick," MacLeish said. "I don't even know whose it was or where it came from. I thought it was going right in.

"But in all-star games where there's not much hitting any team can explode at any minute."

And it took an unlikely candidate to light the fuse, Pittsburgh Penguins' Ron Stackhouse — a defenceman who knows the meaning of the word defence and has three goals to his credit this season to prove it.

After MacLeish missed, up the ice came the Wales crew with Sittler lugging the puck up the left side of centre. He hit a streaking Stackhouse with a perfect pass, and, as Peters said, he bounced it off the post and into the net to start the flood.

"You don't see something like that too often from me," Stackhouse said. "The shot went right where I aimed it and for me that doesn't happen too often.

"I don't even know why I was that far up ice anyway," he added. "It really amazed me that it went right in."

Leach was right when he said that was the turning point.

Canadians expecting a medal

By MIKE RUTSEY

DETROIT (CP) — The Canadian Olympic hockey team doesn't hope to win a medal at the Winter Games at Lake Placid, N.Y. — it expects to.

"There's no question about it, we're here (in the United States) to win a medal and if we don't, we're going to be disappointed," said Tom Watt, one of three Canadian coaches.

Watt, along with the rest of the Canadian team, participated in the National Hockey League's all-star festivities and, before the NHL's 32nd All-Star Game on Tuesday night, played a one-period exhibition contest against the United)tates Olympic team.

Canada won the mini-game 1-0 on a goal by Cary Farelli, who scored on a rebound off Stelio Zupancich's shot from the point.

The period was dominated by tight checking with few scoring opportunities by either side. Canada outshot the U.S. 10-8 and moments prior to Farelli's goal at 15:53, Paul MacLean of the Canadians ripped a wrist shot off the post.

"This is more of a social thing than anything else," said Watt. "We didn't look on it as a game, as such. Sure, we came in to it to play 20 minutes hard, but we didn't look on it as being two points in the standings.

"This period tonight is just the curtain-raiser," he said. "Then we go to Belleville, (Ont.,) to train Wednesday and Thursday (on the larger international-size ice surface), and Friday we play the Czechoslovakian national team in Montreal.

"The next three days, we train on the big ice surface at Lake Placid before we play Holland on the 12th, our first game."

The game against the Dutch squad is one of five preliminary games Canada faces before it can entertain medal hopes. Included in Canada's group, along with the Netherlands, are the Soviet Union, Finland and Japan. The top two teams from the group advance into medal play, along with the first two finishers in the other group.

"Our key game is against Finland," said Watt. "They have an excellent team, they finished second at Izvestia and they scouted us extensively because they also know it's a key game for them."

But Watt harbors no doubt that the team is prepared, both mentally and physically.

"The cohesion here is just great. After all, everybody gave up a lot, they've trained hard. We're fit.

"There's no team in Lake Placid or anywhere in the world that's going to outskate us. Tactically we're well prepared. We've seen a lot of the teams that we're going to play and we know the adjustments we'll have to make."

Watt realizes, too, that the United States is hoping to pick up a hockey medal at Lake Placid but the Americans know it will be tough.

When the U.S. team opens play against Sweden on Feb. 12, it will be almost a year to the day that a National Hockey League all-star team, loaded with the best players in North America, was shut out by the Soviet Union, 6-0, in the deciding game of a best-of-three Challenge Cup Series in New York.

How, then, can the United States expect a bunch of college kids, amateurs in the true sense, to compete with a Soviet team that beat Guy Lafleur, Denis Potvin, Ken Dryden, Clark Gillies, Larry Robinson and the rest of the NHL stars in its own backyard...at its own game...with its own referees...and essentially with its own rules and smaller ice surface?

The answer is, Americans probably can't expect that at all.

While the Soviets, Czechs and Swedes field teams filled with experienced skaters, many of whom could make it in the NHL, the squad the U.S. is sending to Lake Placid averages 21 years of age. None of the 20 players has Olympic experience.

In other words, the United States is asking boys to do a job men couldn't do.

But before suggesting that the fuzzy-cheeked Americans simply run a white flag up their sticks and surrender; before awarding the gold medal to a Soviet team that has won it at every Winter Olympics since 1964, and handing the silver to Czechoslovakia and bronze to Sweden for good measure; before doing any of this, consider:

The Americans, with 18 players drafted by NHL teams, do not play the typical North American hockey style, wherein players dump the puck in their offensive end and chase it while skating up and down in their assigned positions.

Since September, when this young, American team came under the wing of coach Herb Brooks and began a 60-game run in preparation for Lake Placid, the flower of American collegiate hockey has been doing it the European way. Which means skaters leave their traditional assigned positions, crisscross over the ice and pass to teammates rather than dump the puck and chase it.

Since they've been beating some good international teams with their new style of hockey, the Americans believe the will to win at home will stand them in good stead in the medals race.

Malaysia supports boycott

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — The Malaysian cabinet met Wednesday and decided that Malaysia should boycott the Moscow Olympics unless the Soviet Union withdraws it troops from Afghanistan.

The government statement said it has advised the Malaysian Olympic Council not to send a team to the Summer Games.

Although the government statement made it appear like an advisory to the council, the Malaysian sports bodies have always followed government decisions.

Colds can be dangerous for Olympic contestants

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — The medical centre at Lake Placid's Olympic Village is ready to deal with everything from dope tests to frostbite when the Winter Games begin next week.

"We have some of the finest equipment in the world and we have drawn first class staff from American hospitals," said Dr. Roy Bergman, who is in charge of the clinic.

Bergman has practiced in the Lake Placid area for 20 years. He is one of the 2,500 villagers who are making the running of the Winter Games a local community effort.

The clinic will deal with everything short of major accidents in competition.

"If any athlete suffers obvious fractures or serious head injuries, these cases will be taken direct to hospitals," Bergman said. "But we must be prepared to deal with everything else, including suspected fractures."

The clinic has already had one grim accident to handle. Ron Smith, an American bobsledder who crashed at 125 kilometres an hour last Saturday, has been given daily treatment for a badly bruised arm.

The colds and sore throats are beginning to come in. At the Olympic Games colds can be dangerous in more ways than one. At the Winter Games at Innsbruck four years ago a Czech doctor was banned from the Olympics for life because one of his players took a banned medicine for a sore throat. A Russian woman cross country skier was disqualified for the same reason.

"You might think it's easy for somebody to take the wrong medicine," said Dr. Lawrence Early, who is in charge of dope tests. "But in fact there's no excuse for it.

"Every team doctor has a list of medicines banned by the International Olympic Committee (IOC). Every athlete is told to take no medicine or pill without consulting the team doctor. There are plenty of legitimate medicines athletes can take that won't compromise them if they have to take a dope test."

All first, second and third finishers in every event must go to the dope testing room. The IOC has laid down an elaborate process by which urine samples are sealed in flasks, so that doctors who test them cannot know the name of the athletes they came from.

Doctors at the clinic have problems dealing with injuries and illnesses because athletes come from all over the world and the medical profession of one country doesn't always agree with that of another.

"Any athlete who comes for treatment may bring his trainer or medical adviser with him if he chooses," Bergman explained. "But since we are the doctors licensed in this state, we have to give the treatment.

"We listen to any requests made by trainers and try to meet their wishes.

"A Chinese athlete came in with a problem the other day. His doctor came with him, and we wondered how it was going to work out. But the Chinese doctor's views were broadly acceptable. We met him halfway, and he was happy with the treatment we gave.

"If we were in a situation where the athlete's doctor or trainer positively disagreed with the treatment we wanted to give, we would just have to decline to help. But I hope that doesn't happen."

Soviets arrive at Games site

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — An advance party of the Soviet Union's Winter Olympic team arrived at the Games site Tuesday, and its leader said, of the United States' threat to boycott the Moscow Games: "We want to strengthen the Olympic movement."

Arriving with a group of about 85 athletes, Sergei Pavlov, the head of the delegation, announced: "We came to participate in the Olympic Games."

Asked about the proposed boycott of the Summer Games, he said: "We don't want to boycott anyone and destroy the Olympic movement. We want to strengthen the Olympic movement."

Asked about housing and security conditions here, he replied, "You gave all the guarantees and we came."

Pavlov's remarks were translated by Alexander Mossiakov, a counsel to the Soviet committee for physical culture and sports. In all, four officials wearing fur coats and fur hats arrived at the accreditations centre. The others were Valentin Sych, a vice-president of that committee, and Valery Gleikh, said to be an attache, but whose credentials listed him as a cook. Gleikh said that was a mistake.

Through an interpreter, Sych repeated his earlier complaints that the accommodations here were "worse than any previous Olympics." He did not elaborate, although many countries have criticized the small rooms and the athletes' housing, which will become a federal prison after the Games.

The Soviets won 13 gold medals at Innsbruck, Austria, in 1976, including strong showings in hockey, speed skating and Nordic skiing.

Leafs set to shuffle trio off to Buffalo?

TORONTO (CP) — Darryl Sittler, Mike Palmateer and Dave (Tiger) Williams would go to Buffalo Sabres in exchange for Don Edwards, Richard Martin and one other player in a deal proposed by Toronto Maple Leafs, The Star said today.

The newspaper quoted an unnamed source as saying that the National Hockey League trade was under consideration by the Sabres who are reluctant to agree to Toronto's request for either right winger Ric Seiling or defenceman Bill Hajt as the third man in the exchange. The Sabres were reported to be offering defenceman Jerry Korab instead.

Sittler, the former Leafs captain, and goalie Palmateer have been the subject of trade rumors for several weeks. Palmateer talked briefly with Leafs general manager Punch Imlach on Tuesday but said they did not discuss any trade proposals.

Cautious resolution to appear at Moscow

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Delegates to the National Olympics Committees meeting issued a cautious resolution Tuesday urging countries to attend the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow, which U.S. President Carter proposes to boycott.

Without directly mentioning the proposed boycott, the executive council of the Association of National Olympics Committees said the International Olympics Committee should "reject and avoid any external influence on the Olympic movement and the Olympic Games designed to change existing arrangements."

The council said that countries, "when responding to the invitation to the Games of the XXII Olympiad," must observe an Olympic charter rule prohibiting committees from submitting to political pressure.

Arlington Butler, president of the Olympics Committee of the Bahamas, said the resolution was agreed upon "unanimously" by the council, which represents 141 Olympic committees from five continents.

President Carter has called for a boycott of the Moscow Games if the Soviet Union has not withdrawn troops from Afghanistan by Feb. 20.

"The final position was in no way an attempt to offend the United States," Butler said. "We hope the Americans won't be put in a position to withdraw from the Games. That is the general feeling of all. Without the United States the Games won't be what we had hoped."

Phillip O. Krumm, a U.S. representative to the meeting, had urged the council to postpone deciding whether to endorse a boycott.

Krumm, who is not a voting member of the council, submitted a statement to the meeting saying; "The present situation is a very serious one because, on the one hand, we have thousands of athletes who have trained diligently and who are hopeful of competing" in the Moscow Games.

"On the other hand, these athletes are asked to compete in a nation that is at war and thereby violating the Olympic ideals of supporting peace, friendship and understanding between nations of the world."

Opening dates set for big game males

Thinking about a hunting trip during the 1980-81 season?

You can start planning right now.

Fish and wildlife branch officials have just released the proposed opening dates for male big game species throughout the province.

The full list of regulations should be out by early July.

For Region 1, which takes in all of Vancouver Island and a portion of the upper Mainland coast, the season on black-tailed deer opens Sept. 6 in management units 1-1 to 1-15.

Elk hunters should note that a limited entry hunt is being considered for what was designated as an open season area in portions of 1-12 and 1-13 in last year's regulations.

The opening for mountain goat in 1-14 will be Sept. 6 and a date will be announced later for 1-15.

Grizzly bears will become fair game April 1, 1981 and the fall season on black bears opens Sept. 6 in 1-1 through 1-15. A spring black bear season has been scheduled to start April 1, 1981, in 1-1, 1-3 and 1-6 through 1-15.

The season on cougar opens Nov. 1 in 1-1 through 1-15 and a season on wolf is set to open Sept. 27 in 1-9 and 1-11 through 1-13 as well as April 1 this year in 1-14 and 1-15.

Most of the regulations covering special areas, closed areas, no shooting areas and limited entry hunting areas described in last year's regulations are being considered again for 1980-81.

The only real significant change on a provincial basis will be the amalgamation of the Similkameen, Okanagan and Kettle Valley areas to form a new Okanagan Region. The branch advises anyone with enquiries about management units 4-10, 4-11, 4-12, 4-13, 3-1 to 3-11 and 3-21 to 3-25 should be made to the Penticton regional office at 493-2714.

Further information can also be obtained by telephoning Rick Marshall in the Victoria headquarters office at 387-3791.

And, speaking about hunting, things went relatively well on the Island last season.

At Cowichan Lake, hunters took 283 deer (218 males, 53 females, 12 fawns).

At the other areas the count was: Nanaimo River 36 (36-0-0); Nanaimo Lakes 89 (70-11-8); Northwest Bay 56 (37-13-6); White River 11 (11-0-0); Trout Creek 514 (342-123-49); and Port McNeill 79 (46-26-7).

The total for the region last season was 1,068 deer (760-226-82).

NIBBLES: Members of the Island Mountain Ramblers will centre their attention on snow activities during the remainder of February.

Anyone wanting to go on an outing should check with the leader at least two days in advance of the trip. Leaders should also be able to supply information on joining the club and the physical and equipment requirements of the outing.

On Feb. 9, the Ramblers plan a cross-country ski trip (likely overnight) into the Effingham River area, depending on weather and snow conditions. The leader is Margaret Symon (753-3789).

Cross-country skiing is also planned Feb. 17 under Brian Johnson (592-6402) and Mike Taylor (748-1309).

A snowshoe hike is scheduled for Feb. 24 into the Mt. Sutton area. Views of the peaks around Cowichan Lake and Copper Canyon in snow will enhance this joint trip with the Victoria Outdoor Club. Bring snowshoes or skis with skins. The leader is John Cowlin (479-6366).

Great Falls setup going to Spokane?

There could be another team next season in the Western Division of the Western Hockey League.

Victoria Cougar coach Jack Shupe said Tuesday there was a possibility Spokane might be added to the division now made up of the Cougars, Seattle Breakers, New Westminster Bruins and Portland Winter Hawks.

"It's still in the negotiation stage," explained Shupe, "but if Spokane is available, the (now defunct) Great Falls franchise will be moved there. With proper management and a contending team, Spokane will be a welcome addition to our division."

The Great Falls franchise folded Dec. 16 but the owners retain the rights to the players who were distributed throughout the league in a special draft.

Cougars pay a visit to New Westminster for a game Thursday and then face Brandon Wheat Kings in an 8:30 p.m. Saturday game at Memorial Arena.

On Tuesday, Saskatoon Blades were down four goals with less than 10 minutes left, but pulled out a 10-9 victory over Seattle Breakers on Kevin MacNaught's goal at 5:10 of overtime while Regina Pats defeated Calgary Wranglers, 6-3.

Breakers held period leads of 3-1 and 6-3 before increasing the margin to 9-5 at 10:58 of the third.

The Blades rallied for four goals, including the tying marker by Glen Ganchar at 18:53 with goaltender Murray Stephen on the bench in favor of an extra attacker.

The Pats spotted Calgary a 3-0 lead then scored six uanswered goals for the victory. The win moved Regina within three points of Eastern Division-leading Calgary.

All the Wranglers' goals were powerplay efforts.

Dispute ends harness meet

SAN MATEO, Calif. (AP) — Bay Meadows has ended its harness racing season 12 days early because of a labor dispute.

Culinary workers went on strike last month in a dispute over wages and parimutuel clerks had said they would begin to honor the picket lines.

National cadet shoot slated for Victoria

The Dominion of Canada Rifle Association will stage competitions for the 1980 national cadet small-bore championships in Victoria, April 1-2.

A total of 72 boys and girls representing Royal Canadian Army Cadet Corps from every province and the territories will compete.

They will also be competing for a place on the 18-member army cadet rifle team which will represent Canada at Commonwealth rifle matches, to be held in Bisley, England, this summer.

The Anshutz .22 rifle will be used during the DCRA competition.

Top honors in 1979 went to an army cadet team from Pickering, Ont. The air cadet team from Sidney placed second.

Flyers trimmed

Saanich Braves built on their already impressive record in the South Island Junior "B" Hockey League Tuesday night by thrashing Fuller Lake Flyers, 13-4, at Pearkes Arena.

Three goals came from Ron Brooks while Tracy Patterson, Jamie Bowes and Bruce Tuck scored two each for the Braves who also got goals from Greg Bertram, Brian Goodwin, Ian McLean and Mark Byrne. Tony St. Denis scored two goals for the Flyers, whose other scorers were Bert Van Mook and Len Meyer.

In goal for the Braves, Marty Wakelyn made 37 saves while for the Flyers Mark Brown and Jim Lebitschnig combined to make 52 saves.

It was the 30th win this season for the Braves who have lost only once.

Peace talks shattered

DETROIT (AP) — Peace talks between warring factions in Indianapolis-style auto racing have broken off and the dissident Championship Auto Racing Teams group will continue to race under a separate banner this year, a CART spokesman said Tuesday.

CART chairman Pat Patrick said the U.S. Auto Club has rejected CART's proposals to unite the sport under a joint racing series. "All further efforts to resolve the differences between the two groups have been terminated," he added.

The sport splintered in 1978 when several major car owners broke away from USAC and formed CART, claiming they were not being given enough say in USAC decisions.

Patrick said USAC president Dick King rejected the merger in a letter to Leo Mehl, director of racing for Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., one of racing's biggest financial backers. Mehl has been serving as mediator in the negotiations.

However, USAC spokesman Paul Reinhard said at Indianapolis that King told Mehl only that the older sanctioning body could not accept the CART proposals. "We have never . . . said we are severing negotiations with anyone," he said.

In the letter, King said USAC had no objection to CART continuing as a car owners' organization within the over-all USAC structure. USAC also was willing to add two CART members to its board of directors, the letter said.

Patrick said CART had lined up $800,000 in backing for the combined USAC-CART series.

The end of the talks came just one day after A. J. Foyt, four-time winner of the Indianapolis 500 and one of the few big names in racing still with USAC, said he had resigned from USAC because the he wasn't consulted in the peace talks.

A year ago, Foyt, 45, quit USAC and joined CART.

Jabbar grabs spotlight at Magic man's show

By Canadian Press

A sellout crowd of 19,591 filled New York's Madison Square Garden to watch the Magic Show, but the spotlight was stolen from rookie Earvin (Magic) Johnson by an old, familiar face.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 22 points, grabbed 17 rebounds, handed out seven assists, blocked five shots and harassed New York's prize rookie centre, Bill Cartwright, into a miserable 3-for-18 shooting game as Los Angeles Lakers beat the Knicks 116-105 Tuesday night in National Basketball Association activity.

"Nobody can dominate the lane like, Kareem can," said Lakers coach Paul Westhead. "In my opinion, he's the best player in basketball."

"Jabbar is the man," said Johnson, the ebulient rookie who has turned the Lakers into one of the NBA's hottest draws. "He's the best — passer, shooter, rebounder. Look at how smooth and agile he is. I love playing with Jabbar because he does everything."

Elsewhere Tuesday, Seattle SuperSonics downed Cleveland 123-121, Philadelphia '76ers nipped Indiana Pacers 109-108, New Jersey Nets dumped San Antonio Spurs 123-115, Utah Jazz beat Chicago Bulls 116-106 and Portland Trail Blazers defeated Kansas City Kings 105-99.

The game started well for the Knicks, with guards Michael Ray Richardson and Ray Williams driving by the Lakers' Johnson and Norm Nixon for several easy baskets. Williams scored 14 of his game-high 32 points in the first period and the Knicks led 38-32 four minutes into the second quarter.

"After three time-outs, we finally impressed on our guards that they couldn't lay back and wait for the Knicks to come to them," explained Westhead. "You do that with Richardson and Williams and it's all over. We adjusted in the second quarter and that turned it around."

The Lakers held the Knicks without a field goal for a period of 6:38 and outscored New York 40-15 to take command at 72-53 with 8:48 to go in the third quarter. The Knicks made it close, pulling to within six in the fourth quarter, but three baskets apiece by Abdul-Jabbar and Michael Cooper kept the Lakers safely on top.

Jamaal Wilkes added 20 points for the Lakers, who hit 56 per cent from the field, compared with 38 per cent for New York, which saw a five-game winning streak come to an end. Johnson contributed 19 points, 11 assists and 10 rebounds, although he suffered a cut on the left side of his head during a collision under the Lakers' basket midway through the second period.

Guard Dennis Johnson hit two free throws with two seconds remaining and scored a game-high 34 points to keep Seattle in first place in the Pacific Division, one-half game ahead of the Lakers. Johnson's winning free throws came after he was fouled by Campy Russell as he dribbled across the middle to attempt a final shot.

Tom Owens scored 24 points, six in the last quarter, as Portland beat Kansas City.

Finley fights box-building

OAKLAND (AP) — Oakland A's owner Charlie Finley will not allow construction during the baseball season of luxury boxes at the Oakland Coliseum, a key part of attempts to keep Oakland Raiders of the National Footbal League.

The Oakland Tribune quoted an unnamed baseball official in Tuesday's editions as saying that Finley will use the issue of the boxes to attempt to get out of the remaining eight years on his American League team's stadium lease.

Finley himself has declined comment on the issue.

The A's owner, who wants to sell his team to Denver oilman Marvin Davis, is reported ready to contend that construction of the 64 boxes would interfere with his baseball operation.

However, Coliseum lawyer Ed Heafey said he believed the stadium could build the suites in six to nine months without violating the A's lease.

The boxes would be built beneath the loge level of the stadium and mean the removal of the top three rows of seats in the second deck, Coliseum officials said.

"He has to show he needs those three rows," Heafey said. "If Finley were full (with sellout crowds), I'd be worried about it. I don't think Finley is going to have anything to say about it."

The A's have had the worst attendance in the major leagues for several seasons as Finley has repeatedly tried to sell the club.

Aussies poised for test victory

MELBOURNE (AP) — Australia was poised to seal a convincing victory over England after the fourth day of the third cricket test at the Melbourne Cricket Ground Tuesday.

The victory — one England can barely hope to avoid — would mean Australia will whitewash this summer's test series, three matches to none.

England's only chance to save the match rests with its batsmen still at the crease, Ian Botham on 30 and Bob Taylor on 28, and Melbourne's fickle weather.

The forecast was for a fine and sunny day.

Botham and Taylor, who have put on 65 for the seventh wicket, have brought a measure of respectability to England's second innings of 6-157 at stumps.

But they will have to bat until well into the fifth and last day of the match for their side to avoid a big defeat.

They came together with England at 6-92 and facing the humiliation of an innings loss.

Australia resumed its first innings after the rest day at 5-399 with skipper Greg Chappell on 99 and wicket-keeper Rod March on 13.

The last five wickets went for 78 for an Australian total of 477 in reply to England's 306.

AUTOPLAN 80

DON'T JUST RENEW IT. REVIEW IT!

YOUR Autoplan insurance coverage should fit your needs, your situation. That's why we're offering you a wider choice of low-cost insurance options this year than ever before. So don't just renew the same coverage automatically. Ask your Autoplan agent about useful options like these:

1 OPTIONAL UNDER-INSURED MOTORIST COVERAGE.
For $12.00 you can now extend your protection to cover the situation when the person who is at fault does not have enough insurance to cover your claim for injury or death. If you are the victim of such an accident, and you carry this optional coverage, your own coverage can be applied to bring the total payment to the higher limit.

2 OPTIONAL SUPPLEMENTARY NO-FAULT BENEFITS.
If for any reason you feel that the current no-fault benefits (medical, disability, death and funeral benefits) are insufficient to cover your needs, this option allows you to buy higher levels of benefits for a small additional premium.

3 OPTIONAL SUBSTITUTE VEHICLE COVERAGE.
This additional insurance covers the cost of a replacement vehicle for your use in the event that your own vehicle is in an accident and cannot be driven.

The deadline is February 29, 1980. Review early. Renew early.

Braves, Rams stay in tie

It was all still tied at the top Tuesday night after the leaders Belmont Braves and Mt. Douglas Rams both scored victories in the Greater Victoria high school boys' basketball league.

Getting 25 points from Mark Haas and 23 from Al Coles, Belmont defeated Victoria High, 75-65. Will Reid was Vic High's top scorer with 28 points.

The Rams beat Parkland Panthers, 70-56, with Ian Lang scoring 20 points while Guy Hunter was the leading scorer for the third-place Panthers with 13 points.

The victories left Belmont and Mt. Doug tied for the lead in the "AA" division with 4-1 records.

In "A" division play, Dunsmuir Demons defeated Reynolds Roadrunners, 92-70, and St. Michael's University School beat Lambrick Park, 46-42.

Top scorer for Dunsmuir was Terry Kurvers with an impressive 36 points while Rod Chow led Reynolds with 20. Leading scorer for SMU was Terry Berger-North with 23 points. For Lambrick Park it was Curtis Peterson with 18 points and Ed Somers with 13.

Up Island, Gary Stockford got 18 points to lead Cowichan Thunderbirds to a 77-50 win in a boys' game against Highlands of Comox.

And in Greater Victoria High School girls' league play, Mt. Doug Ramblers made it 10 wins in a row with a 65-21 verdict over Lambrick Park. Alison Snow led the Ramblers with 18 points.

In other girls' games, Claremont, getting 28 points from Donna Carey, downed Stelly's, 62-39; Oak Bay, with 35 points from Sue Walton, beat Spectrum, 76-53; and Belmont, with Sheila Bing scoring 19 points, got past Vic High, 56-44.

Dexter gains share of lead

PRINCE GEORGE — There was a bit of a dispute between players and officials here Tuesday but nevertheless Joan Dexter of New Westminster moved into a first-place tie with Linda Moore of North Vancouver heading into the final round of the B.C. women's curling championship.

It appeared that Leila Johnston of the host club had beaten Dexter when she hit and stuck with her extra-end takeout, but officials said her lead displaced Dexter's shot rock with her broom just before the shot was made and awarded the win, 9-8, to the New Westminster rink.

With the previously unbeaten Moore rink going down 8-6 to Heather Haywood of Richmond at the same time, that put Dexter in a deadlock with Moore, both with 6-1 records.

In other games Tuesday, Barb Parker of Comox downed Ruby Niemeyer of Victoria, 9-4, to move to 4-3 and the Niemeyer rink also lost, 7-4, to Eve Skakun of Kamloops to finish with a 3-5 record.

Today, Dexter was to play June Godberson of Fort St. John and Moore was set to meet Carol Clinck of Cranbrook. Victories for both the leaders would mean a tie-breaking game would be neccessary.

Duran offered million to battle Sugar Ray

NEW YORK (AP) — Bob Arum, president of Top Rank, Inc., has offered Roberto Duran $1 million to fight Sugar Ray Leonard for the World Boxing Council welterweight championship in May or June.

The offer was contained in a cable which Arum sent to Carlos Eleta, Duran's manager, in Panama.

Arum placed a deadline of Feb. 15 for acceptance of his offer to Duran and said Leonard would fight either Jose (Pipino) Cuevas of Mexico, the World Boxing Association champion, or Wilfred Benitez, the former WBC champ, if Duran turns down the bid.

"In such event, we would hope to arrange for Roberto Duran to fight against Leonard at some time later on in 1980," Arum's cable said.

Free World Olympics strike housing snag

WASHINGTON (AP) — Puerto Rico no longer has the housing necessary for holding the proposed Free World Olympics, Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo said Tuesday.

The athletes' village, constructed for the Pan American Games held in San Juan last July, has been turned over to a local public housing agency as planned and is now occupied, he explained.

"We couldn't get other housing facilities in time for the proposed Summer Olympics," Romero added.

Romero said his remarks endorsing a proposal by Senator Howard Baker, Rep-Tenn., for the holding of special Olympics for the athletes of those countries which pass up the Moscow Games had been misintepreted.

"I endorse the senator's proposal for the holding of a Free World Olympics," Romero said. "Unfortunately, we cannot hold them in Puerto Rico."

Leaders win again

The Steve Skillings rink, which has already clinched the 18-game, double round-robin series, increased its total to 34 points with a 13-3 win over Don Matheson while Tim Horrigan, in second spot with 22 points, downed Bruce Coulter, 6-3.

In other games, Barry Harvey beat Barry Moore, 11-1, Al Frame nipped Bob Hawkes, 8-6, and Brad Clarke defeated Bill Morris, 9-4.

Last games in the series will be next Tuesday night.

Mike Creery has mission

Victoria marathoner Mike Creery has departed for New Orleans with a mission.

Presuming there is to be an Olympic Games meet this summer, Mike wants to be there, running the marathon for Canada. But first he has to make the Canadian qualifying time of 2 hours, 16 minutes, 33 seconds for the just over 26-mile race. And he must do it before the first week in May.

Mike's best time to date is the 2:21:0 he ran last year in Vancouver but he believes he can run within 2:16:33 and so intends to race this weekend in the New Orleans Mardi Gras Marathon which, he has been told, is over a "very fast course."

The only Canadian to run within the selection time since May 1, 1979, is Ontario's Brian Maxwell, now living and training down in California.

If Mike doesn't make it this time around, the final selection meet is the Vancouver International Marathon on May 4 but he doesn't want to cut it as close as that.

"The thing is to qualify now so you won't be under as much pressure in May," he said Tuesday before heading for New Orleans and some midweek training runs.

Forest collects cup

BARCELONA, Spain (Reuter) — Nottingham Forest of England won European soccer's Super Cup 2-1 on aggregate by holding Barcelona 1-1 in the second leg Tuesday night.

The European champion, 1-0 winner in the first leg last week, survived an early goal by the European Cup-Winners Cup holder and could even afford the luxury of a missed penalty.

Forest trailed after 25 minutes when Frank Gray tripped Barcelona's Danish international, Allan Simonsen, inside the penalty area and Roberto, the Brazilian striker signed last month, made no mistake from the spot.

Forest was back on terms four minutes before half-time when Kenny Burns headed home after a blick-on by Larry Lloyd from a John McGovern corner.

Immediately after the interval, Forest could have sewn up the match when West German referee Walter Eschweiler gave a surprise penalty for a trip by Migueli on Stan Bowles.

John Robertson stepped up to take the penalty, but Pedro Artola, who had such a fine game in Nottingham last week, made a diving save on the spot kick.

Self-confidence, not craziness spurs hang-gliding mountaineer

LONDON (AP) — Frenchman Jean-Marc Boivin is used to people asking if he is crazy.

Boivin, a 29-year-old alpine guide from Dijon, was partially blinded when he flew by hang-glider from the summit of K2, the world's second-highest mountain, last year.

Nowhe plans a daring double climb up the Matterhorn, hang-gliding down once and then skiing down. He laughs at suggestions that he may be a little mad.

"People ask that all the time," he said after being given the annual International Award for Valor in Sport at a banquet Tuesday.

"I don't think I'm crazy, I have confidence in myself."

He was crowned with a $220,000 gold laurel at the 15th century Guildhall.

"When you are flying, you don't think about fear," he said. "You think about technique and staying alive. It's all reflex actions."

Boivin was one of 22 finalists from 10 countries at the lunch, which was attended by 600 diplomats and sporting personalities from more than 120 nations.

Boivin spent four months climbing K2 in the Himalayas before descending from a record 24,940 feet, breaking the world record for altitude flying by hang gliders in the process.

Although he has only half sight in one eye and one third sight in the other, he says his sight is "getting a little better now."

His main problem on the 13-minute descent was that wind turbulence could easily have smashed him into the mountain.

He had originally planned to take a parachute, but abandoned that precaution because of the extra weight.

"I am not a religious man, but when I jumped I commended my soul to the hands of the gods," Boivin said. "I knew that anything could happen and I didn't have a second chance."

The British judges, selected by the Victoria Sporting Club, also made a special award to former American pro football star Darryl Stingley, now almost completely paralyzed after a football accident in 1978.

Stingley, 27, former star wide receiver for New England Patriots, has dedicated his life to helping other disabled people.

His citation said: "Darryl Stingley was nominated for his inner strength, for his long sustained courage and fortitude that has moved him, and continues to move him, to help so many others."

Stingley, paralyzed from the neck down with only the partial use of his right hand, was close to tears as he accepted the special award.

"When I heard about the careers and achievements of the other nominees, I didn't feel I had a chance of an award," he said. "All I'm doing is trying to survive."

A third award of a special scroll was made to English racing driver David Purley for being the most nominated individual in the six-year history of the award.

Among the unsuccessful finalists were seven Russian explorers who became the first men in history to reach the North Pole on skis.

THE DAILY COLONIST

Roundabout route to art

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kenneth Heffel says he wanted to own a piece of Canada's heritage.

So the former steel magnate and rancher spent $6 million on a collection of 150 paintings by the Group of Seven and their contemporaries.

Heffel has come a long and circuitous route to his current occupation as art dealer and gallery owner.

He studied economics at the University of Alberta, worked as an accountant at Canron Ltd. and in 1965 entered the steel business.

With four partners he borrowed $42,000 and founded Great West Steel. Eleven years later it was a public company projecting sales of $75 million for 1976.

Heffel sold his stock that year and resigned as president. Then he bought a ranch.

"Two years before I sold my stock I wanted to leave big business," he said. "I wanted to do other things by the time I was 40."

Heffel, now 44, last week had a copy of a cattlemen's magazine on his desk and turned with pride to the full-page color ad featuring a champion Hereford hobnobbing with with a group of people that included an art dealer in a cowboy hat.

He has been collecting art since 1964.

"I didn't want something that was labor-intensive," Heffel said. "I wanted something capital-intensive.

"I wanted to own a piece of Canada, a piece of its heritage, a piece of its culture. I was interested in the spiritual, emotional, intellectual side."

Now he counsels his clients and does his own buying on answers to two questions: What makes an artist great, and what makes one painting by an artist more valuable than another?

He said a great artist is an innovator, has historical impact and influenced his contemporaries.

"Up to $1,500 you can buy something because you like it. After $1,500 you should apply the criteria I've given you.

"At one point in time I was buying art because I liked it, without specializing, without having a set of criteria. I thought I was a collector, but I was an accumulator."

Public Announcement

SURRENDER OF THE BROADCASTING LICENCE OF CBC TELEVISION STATION CBUVT VICTORIA, BRITISH COLUMBIA

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has surrendered to the Commission its broadcasting licence for CBUVT Victoria, British Columbia.

The CBC was licensed, 2 November 1976 by virtue of Decision CRTC 76-764, to establish a television station at Victoria, utilizing VHF channel 10. Although the Corporation proceeded with the installation of the transmitting facilities and antenna for channel 10, the studio facilities necessary for the production of the 7 hours and 10 minutes per week of local programming, which the CBC was to provide on CBUVT, were not completed.

At a Public Hearing on 26 October 1978, the CBC applied to the Commission to operate channel 10 as a rebroadcasting station of CBUT, Vancouver for an indefinite period until funds became available to complete the Victoria studio facilities.

In Decision CRTC 79-77 the licence of CBUVT was renewed for one year, expiring 31 March 1980, on the condition that CBUVT not commence operation at full power until it was ready to provide a minimum of 7 hours 10 minutes per week of local programming as approved in Decision CRTC 76-764.

At the Vancouver Public Hearing on 19 June 1979, the CBC stated that it could not proceed with the implementation of service on channel 10 because of increased capital and operating costs coupled with major budget reductions.

Accordingly, the commission, on the recommendation of the Executive committee, has accepted the surrender of this licence by the CBC.

Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission — Conseil de la radiodiffusion et des telecommunications canadiennes

Public Notice

The Commission has been advised by the Chief Electoral Officer that he has reinstated the Union Populaire as a registered political party.

Accordingly, that party is entitled to a portion of the broadcast time all broadcasters are required to make available to registered political parties.

The Chief Electoral Officer has further advised that, in view of the unusual circumstances of the situation, pursuant to Section 4.(2) of the Canada Elections Act, he has increased the amount of time which must be made available by broadcasting stations to 396 minutes. The Commission therefore now announces the following time allocation to each party:

	Minutes
Progressive Conservative Party of Canada	143
Liberal Party of Canada	137
New Democratic Party of Canada	64
Social Credit Party of Canada	22
Communist Party of Canada	6
Libertarian Party of Canada	6
Marxist-Leninist Party of Canada	6
Parti Rhinoceros	6
Union Populaire	6

In arriving at these figures, the Commission used the same process as set out in its announcement of January 9, 1980. The commission first allocated six (6) minutes to each of the registered parties. The remaining time was divided among those parties with members of the House of Commons. The division was based on three factors: the percentage of popular vote in the last election, the number of seats in the House at dissolution and the number of candidates fielded in the last election. In this calculation each of the first two factors was given double weight and the third, single.

The Commission however wishes to emphasize that while those factors were considered relevant under the present circumstances, the above allocation is for the purposes of the current election and should not necessarily be taken as a precedent for future elections, where other factors and their relative importance may lead to a different distribution.

The Chief Electoral Officer has set January 31st as the date by which the Union Populaire must indicate its preferences as to the proportion of commercial time and of program time respectively, to be made available to it and the days on which such time, as so proportioned, shall be made available.

Any broadcaster or other licensee who receives a notice as stated above must, within three days of receipt of such notice, consult with a representative of the Union Populaire for the purpose of reaching agreement on the request of that party.

Network licensees are required, under paragraph 18 of Section 99.1 of the Canada Elections Act, to make available free time to registered political parties. These licensees are advised that they should now make available to the Union Populaire an amount of free time equal to that made available to each of the other parties which does not have representation in the House.

Marriage escape clause

by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Doris Roberts, who plays Theresa Faco in the Angie series, has a sense of humor about her 16-year marriage to novelist William Goyen.

It is Doris' second marriage and she says, "We take a yearly option on being together. We call our agents and ask if it's okay to go ahead for another year. It lends an extra bit of excitement to our lives."

The Goyens share a two-bedroom Spanish house, built in 1929, on the side of a mountain near the famed Hollywood Sign with a panoramic view of the entire Los Angeles basin and the blue Pacific.

Although their spacious living room, with a 30-foot ceiling, is comfortable and beautifully appointed, family and guests enjoy the bar, which Doris has dubbed "Rosita's Cantina" for its Mexican decor including bullfight tickets given her by Betty Ford, one of the few women bullfighters.

The house is flanked by a swimming pool and lush gardens tended by William with the aid of a gardener.

Unlike many of Southern California's hillside houses, the Goyen home pleases the eye from the outside. The exterior is made to look like white adobe under a red tile roof. Large oval windows are covered with metal work.

Doris has furnished the house with Chinese pieces, English and American antiques. Her favorite item, however, is a 17th century Spanish chest which William contributed to their marriage.

The house is filled with cut flowers in crystal vases and the walls are covered with oil paintings, portraits, landscapes and still lifes.

Intrepid awarded Order of Canada

HAMILTON, Bermuda (CP) — It was a long time coming, but former spy chief Sir William Stephenson received the Order of Canada in a ceremony Tuesday at his hilltop home in the central parish of Paget.

Winnipeg-born Sir William, 84, was helped to his feet to accept his citation making him a Companion of the Order — Canada's highest honor — from Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer, who made a special trip to the British island.

Sir William, who earned the code name Intrepid from the late British prime minister Winston Churchill, has lived quietly in Bermuda for 17 years.

He was Churchill's personal envoy in New York and director of British security co-ordination in the Western Hemisphere from 1940 to 1946. Some of Sir William's exploits remain classified, but he was the subject of a best-selling book and a television series.

"This quiet Canadian from Winnipeg earned early renown as a pilot in the First World War and became an inventor and industrialist before he was 30," the citation said.

"He played a key role in the Second World War when, amongst other notable achievements, he organized and directed so daring an espionage network that it is credited with playing an important part in the allied victory.

"He was indeed A Man Called Intrepid. Subsequently, Sir William bent his formidable talents to extensive industrial enterprises in Canada and beyond."

With guests lining both sides of the room at Sir William's home, where he has lived for 17 years, Schreyer then placed the medal around the neck of the former British intelligence chief.

The governor-general said the award was for a lifetime of "extraordinary and uncommon achievement."

"It carries with it the esteem and respect of the many millions of Canadians to whom the declaration is a pinnacle of the esteem of their fellow men. It is in this spirit that we are here today to honor you."

In a voice barely audible, Sir William replied: "This is a heartwarming occasion for me — very sincerely.

"Particularly as you (the governor-general) have been so gracious to invest me yourself personally — for taking the trouble to do that. That makes it a double honor. I thank you."

The reception was attended by a number of distinquished guests, including Edwin Leather, a Canadian-born former Bermuda governor, Canadian Commissioner J. S. Nutt, Bermuda Police Commissioner L. M. Clark, also born in Canada, and Bermuda Governor Sir Peter Ramsbothom.

After the ceremony, Sir William took his guests to the nearby Hamilton Princess Hotel, where his special suite was reserved for lunch.

Schreyer, who arrived Monday, planted a commemorative tree in the grounds of Government House, the official residence of Bermuda's governor, before the ceremony.

French fight divides town

BARRIE, Ont. (CP) — Death threats to opponents of a French-language high school in nearby Penetanguishene are the latest tactic in a dispute that has divided the town into two hostile camps.

Two threats, anonymously telephoned Friday to a member of the Simcoe County board of education and a member of a citizens' group opposed to the school, prompted the school board on Monday to sever all negotiations with a French-language advisory committee.

French-language school supporters, represented by the advisory committee, will be satisfied only when the school is officially recognized, he said. The board and Education Minister Bette Stephenson have refused to sanction it.

A former post office building houses the Ecole Secondaire de la Huronie. But the educational future of some of its 57 students is cloudy.

With the help of tutors, they were taking correspondence courses in French from the ministry of education. But during the Christmas break, the ministry informed school officials the courses for 24 students under age 16 would stop unless permission was given by the board of education.

The board's refusal to allow the courses to continue underlined the hostility in the town.

The town is divided into two distinct sections: One says the town's French heritage is threatened by English television, education, bureaucracy and popular culture. The other says that demands for the school hint at increasing Francophone aggression, or that the town's mainly tourism-based economy is threatened by the publicity, or that the issue has been fabricated by outsiders.

Quebec economic union possible

QUEBEC (CP) — An economic association between a sovereign Quebec and the rest of Canada is "technically possible providing the political will to succeed accompanies the undertaking," says a new study prepared for the provincial government.

The document, released Tuesday, said neither a free-exchange zone nor a customs union between an independent Quebec and the rest of Canada would work well.

However, a monetary union with a common currency would allow Canada to maintain its present economic position, while giving Quebec a voice in the development of monetary policy.

The 546-page study was prepared for the Parti Quebecois government by Bernard Bonin and Mario Polese, both economists with the Ecole Nationale d'Administration Publique, an affiliate of the University of Quebec, and jurist Jean-K. Samson.

The report said both a free-exchange zone and a customs union would be prone to upsetting the Canadian economic market. The Quebec government has often said it wants to preserve Canada's present economic position.

These two forms of economic association would bring about "a process of economic disintegration" because the free circulation of goods would be more or less disturbed, the authors said.

A common market, like a free-exchange zone or a customs union, implies the absence of customs duties or tariff barriers. It would also guarantee the free movement of workers, capital and expertise, they explained.

Each state, however, would retain the right to issue its own currency and, as the European common market has demonstrated, administrative problems remain between the members.

The document also suggested a common market would force each partner to sacrifice a certain amount of autonomy. Thus, if Quebec entered in a common market agreement with the rest of Canada, it could not control such things as immigration or the movement of capital.

Link died in Giguere affair

MONTREAL (CP) — The death of a Montreal businessman has resulted in a "missing link" in any theory that Senator Louis Giguere was bribed in the so-called Sky Shops affair, a defence lawyer argued Tuesday.

Only the late Louis Lapointe, who died in 1978, could explain why he insisted in 1972 that Giguere be allowed to purchase 5,000 low-priced shares in the Sky Shops Export Ltd. duty-free shop at Dorval Airport, lawyer Harvey Yarosky said.

Yarosky was presenting the final defence plea before 11 jurors in the Quebec Superior Court trial of former National Hockey League president Clarence Campbell and Bahamas-based businessman Gordon Brown.

Campbell, 74, and Brown, 65, were major shareholders in Sky Shops along with Lapointe. They are accused of having conspired to give Giguere a $95,000 benefit in return for his help in obtaining from the federal government a five-year extension to the Sky Shops lease.

Pensioner fighting mad over icy bill

EDMONTON (CP) — George Restall, 70, won't hand over $25 from his pension cheques to city coffers without a good fight.

"They can take this guy to court — I'll go to jail before I'll pay it," he declares. "If they are going to fight dirty, I'll fight dirty back."

Two weeks ago, Restall and some neighbors were astonished to receive $25 tickets in the mail from the city's bylaw enforcement department.

The reason: "Snow and ice on sidewalk."

Residents of the block, many of them senior citizens, argue that they have not violated the bylaw that requires all property owners to remove "all snow, ice, debris and other obstacles" from adjoining city sidewalks.

While they agree that their sidewalks are not scraped to the concrete, they vehemently insist the task is impossible. They say the sidewalks are in disrepair and haven't seen a work crew in 25 years.

Bill Williams, director of the city's bylaw enforcement branch, says his department receives many complaints from homeowners angry at receiving $25 tickets. He declines to say what will happen to Restall.

Indian hunters protest

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan Indian chiefs asked Premier Allan Blakeney this week why the province prosecutes Indians who hunt on occupied Crown land and on traditional Indian hunting areas.

Blakeney and the provincial cabinet committee were guests at an all-chiefs conference.

Environment Minister Ted Bowerman said Indians had their fishing and hunting authority established in treaties.

The minister said the law must be observed but that Indians can discuss possible changes with the government.

Chief Tony Cote, of the Cote reserve in southeastern Saskatchewan, said he sometimes thinks treaties were made to benefit the "dominant society (non-Indians)."

Less mercury in fish

MOOSE JAW (CP) — Mercury levels in fish caught in Cookson Reservoir in the Coronach area near the Montana border appear to have declined since last summer, says Bob Stedwill, environmental planner for Saskatchewan Power Corp.

Last month the provincial health department warned that walleye and other fish in the reservoir contained mercury in excess of acceptable Canadian safe limits of 0.5 parts per million. Commercial fishing was banned and only recreational fishing allowed.

Preliminary study showed that while mercury levels are still above acceptable safe limits, the fish are not as contaminated as those caught by Environment Canada officials last summer.

Grain target elusive

WINNIPEG (UPC) — Grain Transport Authority chief Dr. Hugh Horner, despite some headway, seems unlikely to achieve his goal of increasing Canada's grain handling capacity by 20 per cent in the 1979-80 crop year.

The Canadian Grain Commission reported Monday that movements of Canadian grain rose by just 5 per cent to 10.3 million metric tons in the first six months of the crop year.

"Sure I'm disappointed," said Horner in an interview. "But I think if a number of factors change we can do some catching up."

Sylvan Lake Park official

SYLVAN LAKE, Alta. (CP) — Sylvan Lake Provincial Park is officially in existence.

Secretary-treasurer Rick Grimson told town council this week that the park consists of 210 acres and contains "mostly water."

Grimson said the provincial parks and recreation department informed the town by letter Friday that the new park came into being Jan. 16 with approval of an order-in-council. He said the letter contained only a few sketchy facts and council wants more information.

Fire damages school

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — A fire early today caused extensive damage to the Queen May elementary school in Prince Albert.

The alarm was turned in about 6 a.m. by a city police patrol which noticed smoke coming out of the roof.

It's still not certain whether anyone was in the building and the cause of the fire is unknown. The blaze was concentrated in the older part of the school.

Offers bombard bomb shelter ad

EDMONTON (CP) — Lance Weatherill has been bombarded with replies to a newspaper advertisement he placed two weeks ago looking for people interested in sharing a bomb shelter.

He said he placed the advertisement because he was convinced the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan could be the first step on the road to nuclear war.

Weatherill was looking for 20 families to share a bomb shelter in a secret Alberta location — but he has received about 200 replies.

Now he has withdrawn the advertisement while doing more research into the plan.

"I want to get a little more information on what the cost is going to be to dig this hole in the ground and put a roof over it," said Weatherill.

He had hoped to build a shelter of about 18 square metres, costing between $15,000 to $20,000 per family. New plans are for a much larger shelter that would also house 500 cows for milk.

Weatherill said plans will probably allow for an underground stay of up to two years.

$13M for search-rescue — NDP

ELECTION 80

COMOX (UPC) — West-coast search-and-rescue operations would be upgraded to a tune of $13 million if the NDP was elected to power, Ed Broadbent pledged Tuesday.

The New Democratic leader promised he would implement recommendations contained in a party report made previously to the federal transport department while canvassing on behalf of its author, local MP Raymond Skelly (Comox-Powell River).

The report describes search and rescue operations off British Columbia as understaffed and poorly equipped.

Skelly also recommended that the search and rescue force be unified under the supervision of the Canadian Coast Guard. It now is administered by the federal departments of transport, national defence, fisheries, and office of the solicitor-general.

Skelly, one of two NDP MPs on Vancouver Island, also proposes a federal pledge to spend $13 million on satellite communication be postponed in favor of purchasing helicopters and more vessels.

"The $13 million they would use on sophisticated satellite communications would provide a good start-up for upgrading the operation," Skelly said.

"We too often have to rely on our U.S. neighbors to do the necessary job because we lack the vessels and aircraft," he said. "They (the government) haven't acted, and as in so many areas, they have done nothing."

Later Tuesday in North Battleford, Sask., Broadbent made light of Prime Minister Clark's appeal to voters for another chance at government.

Taking dead aim at the Progressive Conservative campaign motto, "real change deserves a fair chance," Broadbent said Clark had his opportunity but chose instead to continue the policies of the previous Liberal government.

"Last May 22, a vote for the Conservatives was a vote for the Liberals, just as it would be on Feb. 18 this year," he told an enthusiastic crowd of about 600 at a party rally here.

In his final campaign appearance of the day here, Broadbent said the energy and interest rate policies of the Conservatives would cost the typical Saskatchewan farmer an extra $2,200 a year.

Higher interest rates on loans accounted for $1,200 and increased energy prices and taxes proposed in the December budget would have added another $1,000.

Broadbent planned to visit the late John Diefenbaker's riding of Prince Albert today to muster support for Stan Hovdebo, who last fall delivered the riding into NDP hands with a slim 611-vote margin.

The riding is one of three areas where the party could make gains in the Feb. 18 election in the province where it currently holds five seats and the Tories nine.

Pierre stumps in Dief country

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask. (UPC) — Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau evoked the memory of his longtime political adversary John Diefenbaker Tuesday in an emotional speech before supporters in the late prime minister's home riding.

The 60-year-old Liberal leader told close to 1,000 cheering supporters that if Diefenbaker was still alive, he would join criticism by the Opposition of the budget proposals introduced by Prime Minister Joe Clark's government in December.

"Although we were from different parties, Mr. Diefenbaker and I believed in one Canada," Trudeau said, adding that the budget spelt disaster for Canadians and Saskatchewan's farmers.

He told the crowd that if Diefenbaker was still alive, he would be up on the high school stage condemning the Tory budget which increased the excise tax on gasoline by 18 cents a gallon and proposed a a 25-cent diesel fuel tax.

Trudeau said the two taxes together would have cost prairie farmers $3,300 apiece by 1982.

He told his supporters Clark was not doing the job he was elected to do, and said that instead of tackling the nation's big problems of inflation and unemployment, the Tory leader had fiddled with Petro-Canada and the move of the Canadian embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

Earlier Tuesday, Trudeau told Liberals in Calgary they've been let down by the federal Conservatives, and especially "the silent 21" Alberta Tory MPs, in budget and energy policies.

"Where were the 21 MPs when Westerners needed them when Clark threw away the chance to build the Alaska oil pipeline?" he asked.

Energy answer in potato power: Clark

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I. (CP) — Prime Minister Joe Clark hailed "potato power" Tuesday as part of the Tory solution to the energy crisis, but was confronted by a Prince Edward Island potato farmer angry about another aspect of his energy policy.

In a luncheon speech, Clark promised federal money would be used for projects using potatoes unfit for consumption to manufacture "gasohol" — ethanol, which can be to substitute for petroleum-derived fuels.

But on a radio talk show in Charlottetown, an irate potato farmer told Clark that the Conservatives' proposed excise tax on gasoline would cost individual farmers more than $10,000 a year.

In his Charlottetown speech, the prime minister praised a local gasohol project, and said it illustrated the Conservative policy of finding alternate forms of energy to replace crude oil.

"We are using resources we used to discard," he said.

He said Finance Minister John Crosbie's December budget had set aside money for experimental projects in tidal, wind and solar power and biomass. "Instead of wasting energy, we are making energy out of waste," he said.

He said Atlantic Canada, dependent on foreign oil to run its electrical generators, would benefit from the Tories' $300-million, four-year program to convert to such alternate energy sources as natural gas or coal.

Clark claimed the proposed 18-cent-a-gallon excise tax increase would force Canadians to conserve a million gallons of gasoline over five years.

But during the hotline radio show, a potato farmer insisted that the tax would seriously harm producers.

The caller asked the prime minister how his proposed $220 energy tax rebate would help a farmer faced with extra costs, "directly or indirectly, between $10,000 and $12,000" because of the extra tax.

Clark responded that those figures quoted were "inconceivable" and he would ask the finance department to investigate.

Roy not in favor of U.S. alignment

ST. GEORGES-DE-BEAUCE, Que. (CP) — Social Credit leader Fabien Roy says Canada could lose its international credibility if diplomats adopt the habit of acting to help United States citizens in trouble throughout the world.

"Canada should take the U.S. into account but it shouldn't give the Americans carte blanche in foreign policy and follow their lead all the time," Roy told a news conference Monday before a home-riding campaign visit to several factories and senior citizens residences.

Roy said that Canadian authorities should show restraint and try to maintain the country's traditional international role as an impartial arbitrator.

"We are so dependent on the U.S. in economic and even political terms that we should try to keep a margin to manoeuvre in foreign policy," he said.

But Roy emphasized that he was not criticizing Canadian authorities for their action in helping six U.S. diplomats escape from Tehran. He said Kenneth Taylor, former Canadian ambassador to Iran, and his colleagues had responded well to the demands of an exceptional situation.

The Socred leader said he does not agree with the strategy used by the Clark government "which has used Mr. Taylor as if he was a candidate for the Conservative party in the Feb. 18 election."

COOK

WOODWARD
. . . NDP hopeful

Special from the Sun

VANCOUVER — Many voters of North Vancouver-Burnaby haven't made up their minds how to mark their ballots in the federal election Feb. 18.

But a surprising number of those interviewed indicate they'll probably give Joe Clark another chance by voting for Conservative candidate Chuck Cook.

Cook, elected in the Tory sweep last May, has won respect as "a good constituency man," although Liberal challenger Gordon Gibson has branded him "the phantom MP" because of his low profile as a backbencher in the Commons during the tense minority regime.

North Vancouver-Burnaby is one of the ridings the Liberals hope to pick up if enough voters reject Clark's performance as prime minister and Gibson is busy pounding on doors in a different polling district of the riding every day.

The other candidates in the riding that sprawls from St. Georges Avenue one block east of Lonsdale in North Vancouver to Sperling in North Burnaby are Jack Woodward, New Democratic Party, and Poldi Meindl, Social Credit.

North Vancouver-Burnaby, the new riding last year that replaced the old Burnaby-Seymour, was won comfortably by Cook with 16,645 votes compared with 14,386 for Gibson, 12,084 for Russ Hicks (NDP) and 190 For Meindl. Independent and Marxist-Leninist candidates trailed with 25 votes and fewer.

Burnaby-Seymour, held by Senator Ray Perrault in 1968, went NDP when it elected Ed Nelson in 1972 and reverted to Liberal when Marke Raines won it in 1974.

North Vancouver-Burnaby's population is listed at 54,141, about 400 above the national riding average, and returning officer June Carter says voter registration is increasing steadily.

There are 319 polling stations in the ridding and a rural poll for voters scattered from the head of Indian Arm to the hinterland above Mosquito Creek.

It's a split-personality riding with well-to-do homes, condominiums and modest houses, two main streets, shopping centres and industrial area, and the Second Narrows Bridge is the spine that holds it together.

Vern Taylor, operator of the Chevron Self Serve station at Hastings and Inlet, on the eastern boundary of the constituency, and a resident of the riding, was the first voter interviewed and his comments were echoed in other parts of the riding.

"I'm going the same way as I did last time — Conservative," Taylor said. "I'm a businessman."

He said he approved the decision of the Clark government to refuse a plea from Trident Aircraft for $4 million to keep the Vancouver Island amphibian manufacturing plant operating, a decision that could cause the Conservatives trouble in Esquimalt-Saanich.

"Trident couldn't borrow money from the bank so it expected the government to bail it out," Taylor observed. "Nobody picks up my overdraft and I don't expect it."

He conceded that the 18-cent-a-gallon gasoline price increase proposed by Finance Minister John Crosbie would be a tough blow but said that Canadians should be prepared to tighten their belts to safeguard evergy supplies.

But a few blocks along Hastings, Calvin Louie, co-owner of Willingdon Esso and resident of 4512 Midlawn, disagreed.

"I'm for Trudeau," he said. "I vote Liberal.

"Trudeau is a strong man who makes decisions," Louie added. "You can't blame him for inflation. The economy of the whole world is not good. It's not Trudeau's fault.

"Crosbie's the man behind it," he said.

Said Gordon Hanna, 66, partially retired, of 260 East 12th, North Vancouver:

"I predict Clark with a majority this time. And Cook will beat Gordon Gibson here for sure."

Keith McBean, 42, a roofer, of 465 East Third, North Vancouver, said he'll vote for Cook but thinks the Liberals will "sneak back in."

Steve Sturrock, 27, also a roofer, of 3629 Mountain Highway, North Vancouver, said he will vote for Woodward and the NDP.

"The NDP have done something in the provinces but they've never had a chance to prove themselves federally," he said. "The Liberals and Conservatives aren't much different from each other. They just flip flop."

Ron Atkinson, 28, a shingle mill worker, of 140 East Third, North Vancouver, said he's not really into politics but will probably vote NDP.

Postman Fraser Buckingham, 28, of 116—261 East Third, North Vancouver, identified himself as a Liberal.

"People probably thought we needed a change in government last year so they put the Conservatives in," he said. "But the Liberal government didn't do too bad compared to this one.

"A lot of people are surprised that Clark lasted as long as he did."

Electrician John Hibberd, 28, of 424 East 15th, North Vancouver, said he'll probably vote NDP.

Mary Gillies, 1335 East 27th, North Vancouver, a newcomer to the constituency: "NDP. I've never gotten my candidate in anywhere yet. But I'll try again in this riding."

Realtor Edwin Devlin, 44, of 1121 Lillooet Rd., North Vancouver, said he'll vote Conservative.

"I've no problems with the budget, it's fair," he said. "For the first time in 13 years the government tried to reduce the deficit."

He said he supported the gasoline price hike on grounds that gas is a luxury. "I use it, too, but I'll pay for it," he said.

Tories favor more control over fishing

NANAIMO (CP) — Fisheries Minister James McGrath said Tuesday a Progressive Conservative government would emphasize stronger enforcement over fishing if re-elected in the Feb. 18 federal election.

McGrath told about 30 fishermen at a party office here that diminishing fish stocks have forced serious decisions in the past.

"We've arrived at a point in time when critical decisions must be made,," he said, noting he previously had to call for reduction in salmon licences off Newfoundland's coast because of seriously depleted fish stocks.

The minister said one of the setbacks of the fall of the Conservative government was that an 18-member council, comprised of representatives from various sectors of the industry, met only once. The council, he said, provides direct access to the minister for discussion of everyday problems in the industry.

McGrath also said he wants an end to herring roe fishing because of the threat to dwindling herring stocks and that he prefers that no size limit be set on salmon fishing.

Flora claws Soviets over Afghanistan invasion

By AL FORREST

External Affairs minister Flora MacDonald turned super-hawk in Victoria Tuesday, saying that Russians are not the sort of people Canadians should associate with.

She told a University of Victoria student audience Russians are guilty of "both rape and murder" in Afghanistan.

She referred to a year-old massacre of Afghan citizens (by Afghan troops, assisted by Russian advisers) and said "that sort of thing is going on every day."

She said there should be no exchange programs with the Soviet Union because it represents a culture that Canadians should not go along with.

She was responding to a question from a student who wanted to know how Canada could understand what the Russians want if all ties are cut off between the two countries.

MacDonald replied that it is easy to understand rape and murder.

Later in a private interview she toned down her emotional outburst a bit and defined the extent to which relations would be impaired between the two countries.

"At the present time," she said, "we will not be having any cultural exchanges with the Soviet Union in any situation where the Canadian government is involved.

Then she repeated: "At the present time."

She said the action was tied directly to Soviet actions in Afghanistan.

Her visit began with a triumphal entry with her host, Defence Minister Allan McKinnon.

They had been expecting a small turnout but more than 1,100 turned out. The auditorium in the Student Union Building had seating for only 350. But more than 400 squeezed in and another 700 were pushing and shoving outside the door trying to get in.

MacDonald got an ovation when she was introduced and her outline of Canadian actions in the Mideast drew enthusiastic response.

Reaction was more subdued on domestic issues and MacDonald stumbled in dealing with questions about Petrocan and oil tankers.

A student asked her why the Conservatives had advocated dismantling Petrocan. She said the Tories had never advocated that.

There was loud skeptical laughter.

She responded that the new Conservative pledge to allow private investors to put money into Petrocan would help the government corporation to become more important than at least some of the multi-national oil companies operating in Canada.

On the tanker question, she was asked why the Canadian government was not represented at Northern Tier hearings in Olympia, Washington, especially since that route would involve tankers coming into the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

She responded that it was nothing to worry about because there was little chance the Northern Tier proposal could attract the necessary financing to let it proceed.

This also drew ironic laughter and shouts of "wishful thinking!"

Finally, she pledged to send a representative to Olympia before the hearings end.

"We'll be there," she said.

Her outline of Canadian actions in smuggling six American envoys out of Iran drew the loudest applause of the meeting.

"It's something all Canadians can be proud of."

While the invasion by the Soviet Union has rivetted the attention of much of the world, she said, no one should lose sight of the fact that oil is the central issue.

The Russians are not in Afghanistan because they are interested in goatherds, she said. They plan to use Afghanistan as a conduit to the oilfields of the Mideast.

This puts Canada in a vulnerable position because we rely upon the OPEC nations for 20 per cent of our oil supplies.

It is irresponsible, she said, for any Canadian government to fail to take action to reduce this dependence on foreign supplies.

The only defence is to raise the price of Canadian oil both to encourage conservation and to make it financially feasible for companies to develop non-conventional oil sources, especially from the oil sands of Alberta.

While central and western Canadians have access to oil at $14.75 a barrel, those in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces must buy it from OPEC at $30.

Because of the Canadian policy of equalization, these imported barrels must be subsidized by the taxpayer.

In effect the federal government is buying oil at $30 a barrel and selling it at $14.75.

Anyone who advocates a continuation of that policy, started by the Liberal government, is living in a fool's paradise, she said.

Students applauded loudly but were silent moments later when she said the 18-cents-a-gallon tax increase on gasoline was related to the need for energy self-sufficiency.

When a student asked her to explain the relationship, she said the tax money would help Ottawa to locate alternative sources of fuel.

(According to budget figures only a small amount would have been used for that purpose).

MacDonald survived another touchy moment when one student asked her a lengthy question in French.

A similar situation in Burnaby, involving Prime Minister Clark, drew jeers when he responded in French.

MacDonald responded in French, but slowly and briefly, and more than half the audience understood and applauded. There was no jeering, although there was some quiet muttering of "I don't understand. I'm a foreigner in my own country."

The question in French was whether she would support the stand of Ontario Premier Bill Davis and refuse to negotiate with Leves-que if the national sovereignty resolution passes.

Her response (as given through a student interpreter) was to the effect that Canada would deal with the reality of the situation when and if it arose.

Near the end of the meeting, a war veteran in the audience asked a question of the defence minister and started with: "I'm for you, Mr. McKinnon."

It drew one of the loudest ovations of the session.

These may be perilous times, but Bob Hope still manages to get a laugh or two out of them. Says he, "The choicest assignment in the foreign service right now is Ambassador to Denmark. Over there they throw Danish pastries at you."

From pastries to cheesecake, Suzanne Somers said she will turn over to the U.S. Easter Seal Campaign the $10,000 diamond and $10,000 cash she is to receive from Playboy magazine, which published nude pictures of her. Somers, honorary chairman of the campaign, was outraged when the magazine published photographs taken a decade ago.

Santa Claus is not the only one who has to cope with an overflowing holiday mailbag. There is Doris Pfiester, a 67-year-old Loveland, Ohio, widow who is known thereabouts as "the Valentine Lady." In her official capacity for the Loveland Chamber of Commerce, she is responsible for remailing thousands of Valentine's Day greetings that pour into the town each February. Mrs. Pfiester stamps each letter with a Loveland postmark and a red-ink picture of Cupid, accompanied by the message, "There is nothing so sweet as love."

Rumors of a royal match between Prince Charles, heir to the British throne, and Princess Marie-Astrid of Luxembourg, are once again cropping up. News of the World says the attractive daughter of Grand Duke Jean and Grand Duchess Caroline had a private audience with Pope John Paul II last week that church sources believed centered on problems of a "mixed marriage." Marie-Astrid, 26, is a Catholic. Charles will someday succeed Queen Elizabeth as head of the Church of England.

Scores of citizens who descended upon the Los Angeles' Ann Street animal shelter in the hopes of adopting about 80 newly-orphaned canaries were turned away without a bird in the hand, says animal control officer Eloisa Chacon. The birds have been at the shelter since their elderly owner was found dead in his home. Officials have been unable to find his relatives. "People got the impression the birds could be adopted — and they can't. We have to hold them until officials tell us what to do with them," said Chacon. "In cases where an owner dies, that can be a while. We once had a cat here for two years."

Dear Abby:

From time to time I read complaints from readers insisting that you didn't answer their letter, even though they sent self-addressed, stamped envelopes.

Well, I have written to you several times, and I have always received a prompt, personal and very helpful reply.

Our newspaper seldom prints your address, so I write in care of the newspaper.

Doesn't it ever occur to people that once in a while the mailman goofs up? Many times honest neighbors will bring us our mail which had been placed in their box by mistake!

Abby, please print your address. I'm sure your readers would appreciate it and you'd get a whole lot more mail from people who might not otherwise write.

Believes in You

Dear Believes:

Thanks, I needed that. My address is:

Abby
Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212

Now, for some ground rules:

Unlike "Letters to the Editor," you need not sign your name in order to have a letter answered in my column. But because I receive thousands of letters each week, the chances of being answered in the column are small. However, every letter accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope receives a personal reply. For you readers in the Victoria area, I parcel all your return envelopes up up and send them to The Victoria Times for mailing from in British Columbia — so the return envelope with Canadian postage still applies. (I do not send form letters!)

Every letter is held in strictest confidence. Those sent in care of The Times are forwarded to me, unopened.

I never disclose the writer's name or location without his consent. (Some suggest their own "phoney" names; some are dreamed up by me.) Their locations are also changed in the interest of privacy, and to protect the innocent as well as the guilty.

Some published letters must be edited for clarity and length, but I do not alter the contents.

There is no charge for a personal reply, but I am not obligated to answer letters unless they are accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

So, if you have a personal problem and need help, write to me. I care.

Love, Abby

Dear Abby:

You suggested to one of your readers that birdseed should be used for throwing at weddings instead of the usual rice or confetti.

Did it occur to you that birds would just as likely eat the rice as much as birdseed? I'll bet you "mustard seed" this coming.

Here's hearty Valentine fare

Valentine's Day is a week tomorrow and you might like time to make an edible Valentine to use as a centrepiece for a party.

Today's recipe is Heart O' Gold Cheese Spread. It will help you set the theme. It's ideal for teenage or adult parties.

This savory cheeseheart gets a special nip from worcestershire sauce while prepared mustard adds a golden yellow color and mellow flavor. You can make this spread well in advance.

To make shaping easier draw a heart about 6 to 8 inches across on a piece of cardboard. Cut out and cover with foil or plastic wrap, then shape cheese mixture on top. Whole unblanched almonds finish this valentine picture.

Zesty Beef Dip adds a tasty contrast to the cheese spread. It can be prepared in minutes right in a chafing dish or fondue pot.

An envelope of seasoning mix combined with ground beef serves as a basis for this hot and hearty dip that's a welcome treat on a brisk winter night. Crispy corn chips are the perfect accompaniment.

HEART O' GOLD CHEESE SPREAD

1 package (8-oz.) cream cheese, softened
1 1 cup shredded Swiss Cheese
1 tablespoon Prepared Mustard
1 tablespoon Worcestershire Sauce
⅛ teaspoon Garlic Powder or fresh clove crushed
Unblanched almonds, if desired
Assorted crackers.

Beat together all ingredients, except almonds and crackers, until smooth. Refrigerate 30 minutes, or until firm. Form into heart shape on serving platter; garnish with almonds. Serve with crackers. Makes about 2 cups.

ZESTY BEEF DIP

½ pound ground beef
1 envelope (1½-oz.) Seasoning Mix for Sloppy Joes
1 can (5½-oz.) tomato paste
⅓ cup water
3 tablespoons chopped green pepper
Corn chips or taco seasoned chips.

Brown beef in medium-size saucepan or chafing dish, stirring to crumble; pour off excess fat. Add contents of seasoning mix envelope, tomato paste, water, and green pepper. Cook and stir over medium heat until mixture comes to a boil.

Serve hot with chips for dipping. Makes about 2 cups dip.

Soup is supper in a second

A jug of wine, a loaf of bread, a bowl of soup and a salad, and a successful winter meal is under way.

Around the fire after outdoor activity, soup is an ideal choice for the main dish at a party where the host and hostess need simple, do-ahead dishes that can be readied the moment you come indoors.

If there's time, make your own baguettes and crusty Italian bread; if not scout out the best versions in local bakeries.

A hearty whole wheat bread would be an appropriate accompaniment for the two soups outlined below.

CREAMY ITALIAN DRESSING

1 cup mayonnaise
1 small onion
2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
Pinch sugar
½ teaspoon each basil and oregano
¼ teaspoon salt
1 clove garlic, peeled
Black pepper

Place mayonnaise, onion, vinegar, sugar, basil, oregano, salt garlic and pepper in blender container; cover. Blend until smooth. Makes one and one-quarter cups.

The first of the suggested soups is from Guiliano Bugialli, cookbook author, who teaches Italian cooking both in New York City and Florence.

CACCIUCCO

2¾ pounds assorted fish and shellfish
1 red onion, chopped
½ bunch parsley, minced
2 cloves garlic, minced
5 tablespoons olive oil
1 (16-ounce) can Italian tomatoes
2 tablespoons tomato paste
Salt and pepper to taste
Pinch dry red pepper flakes
¼ cup red wine vinegar
2 or 3 fish heads
8 cups beef broth
8 large slices bread, preferably Tuscan Garlic.

1. Fish that could be used include cod, haddock and-or smelts. Soft-shelled crabs, calamari, shrimp, clams or mussels could be used as desired. Avoid fat fish or any with a very strong flavor. Clean fish and cut flesh into chunks. Clean calamari and cut into rings. Leave shrimp in shells.

2. Saute onion, parsley and garlic in oil. When golden brown, add tomatoes, tomato paste, salt, pepper and red pepper; cook for 10 to 15 minutes. Add wine vinegar, heads, any extra bones from cleaning fish, and cook 10 minutes. Add enough broth to cover, and simmer gently for 2 hours.

1. Strain contents of pot and push through strainer. Taste for salt and pepper — it should be spicy. Place strained broth back on stove, simmer, then add fish in stages, depending on how long each should cook. The calamari takes 30 minutes, fleshy fish, shrimps, crabs and smelts take 10 to 12 minutes.

4. Toast bread and rub with garlic. To serve, pour soup over bread in soup bowl. There should not be too much liquid. Makes 10 servings.

CREAM OF ZUCCHINI AND CUCUMBER SOUP

3 medium zucchini, sliced
1 medium cucumber, peeled, seeded and drained
3 ribs celery, cut in slices
2 scallions, sliced including some green
3 cloves garlic, minced
4 to 5 cups chicken broth
Fresh herbs in season — parsley, dill, thyme, etc.
Salt and pepper to taste
1 cup heavy cream or dairy sour cream

Simmer zucchini, cucumber, celery, scallion and garlic in broth with herbs until they are quite soft. Puree in batches in a food processor or blender until smooth. Season to taste with salt and pepper; stir in cream. For texture, add some chopped raw zucchini or cucumber. Makes six servings.

Yogurt gets a nice nod from medics

By DR. L. L. COLEMAN

Manufacturers of yogurt have ascribed to it many advantages. Dr. Gershon Hepner and his co-workers at the Harbor General Hospital at the University of California in Los Angeles, made an interesting observation. They found that the serum cholesterol in the blood was definitely reduced by five to 10 per cent if the diet was supplemented with either non-pasteurized or pasteurized yogurt, after only one week.

They believe that the beneficial effects were attributed to the increase of calcium in the yogurt. They said, "The recent findings that atherosclerosis may regress in patients with high cholesterol levels indicate that dietary supplementation with yogurt may be potentially useful in the treatment as well as in the prevention of vascular disease."

The fact that calcium may play such a role in a complex mechanism does not mean that readers or patients should, on their own, supplement their calcium intake without the specific advice of their doctors.

For years, the ultimate hope has been that atherosclerosis, the cause of strokes and heart attacks, might one day be reversed. Many attempts have been made with drugs to halt the progress of the narrowing of the arteries.

Dr. David Nash, professor of medicine at the State University of New York in Syracuse, now believes it is possible for doctors to interrupt the progression of coronary artery disease. Dr. Nash has just completed a two-year study with 17 patients, after slashing the cholesterol levels in their blood with lipid-lowering drugs. In addition, well-regulated exercise and dietary control were prescirbed.

At the onset of the study, all 17 patients had definite evidence of narrowing of the major coronary arteries to the heart. In addition, there was definite high cholesterol levels in the blood.

Each patient was given the drug, colestipol hydrochloride, along with a well-regulated low cholesterol diet. Follow-up X-ray studies (arteriograms) showed a very definite widening of the coronary arteries.

Dr. Nancy [illegible], of the Pennsylvania State University, believes that intellectual abilities need not automatically decline as people get older. Dr. Treat states that older people can be trained to reacquire mental skills that have been lost through disuse. Various techniques are being devised to reinforce memory performance in the elderly. These, in conjunction with new drugs that are on the horizon, may be the answer to one of the most distressing problems of the elderly.

"You always said you liked fish."

Vegetarianism is contagious

By MIKE McGRADY

Consider the poor vegetarian. While the rest of the gang is ordering a second martini, he's fantasizing about a carrot juice cocktail with just a soupcon of . . . or . . . sauerkraut squeezings. While you're polishing off a juicy steak and then lighting up a postprandial cigar, he's getting suited up for his eveing jog. Ah, never to know the thrill of a Big Mac, a hot dog, a slab of roast beef . . . I tell you, there's something definitely unwholesome about the common garden-variety vegetarian.

The only trouble with the vegetarian way of life, it's at least mildly contagious. Several years ago, strictly as an economy measure, our family tried one meatless meal a week. We found we could do very nicely with an omelet or a souffle on that one night. And a cheese casserole worked pretty well on another night. Every now and then there was an all-salad night. The way things now stand, a month can go by before we sink our teeth into anything more profound than a chicken.

This happens to be my favorite meatless meal. Try it just for the fun of it. But be forewarned: Once you start, there's no telling where it will lead.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: olive oil, salt, pepper, eggs, flour, soy sauce, garlic.

The Shopping List: Four large ripe tomatoes; two large Bermuda onions; dill, preferably fresh; one box of wheat pilaf (you may have to visit the health food store for this); one large potato; one bunch parsley; scallions; four lemons; one head cabbage; two carrots; two green peppers; cucumber; celery; whole wheat four; evaporated milk (13-ounce can); small container sour cream; various cheeses and fruits in season.

Prepare in Advance: The tomato soup. Take four of the ripe tomatoes and peel them. The way to do this: Dip them in boiling water for less than a minute. The skin will fall away easily with a little prodding from a paring knife. Slice the peeled tomatoes and put them in a saucepan over medium heat. Add one large onion, chopped. And two cloves of garlic, minced. A large pinch of dill, minced. A potato, peeled and sliced thinly. A generous amount of salt and freshly ground pepper. Set heat to low, cover pot and simmer soup until potato is cooked through — 15 to 20 minutes.

Pour soup into electric blender and mix it until it is smooth. Stir in the small container of sour cream and put mixture into refrigerator to cool.

Also Prepare in Advance: The wheat salad. Wheat pilaf can be found in some supermarkets and most health-food stores. Put one cup of wheat pilaf in a bowl. Boil two cups of water over a high heat and add that to the pilaf. The pilaf will absorb the water in less than an hour. When it cool, add one green pepper, chopped fine. Peel and grate two large carrots and add them. Peel a cucumber, cut into tiny pieces and add that. Peel and chop an onion and add that.

And now the seasonings. Add a large handful of chopped parsley, a pinch of salt and pepper to taste. And then a salad dressing consisting of a third of a cup of freshly squeezed lemon juice and the same amount of olive oil.

And now the seasonings. Add a large handful of chopped parsley, a pinch of salt and pepper to taste. And then a salad dressing consisting of a third of a cup of freshly squeezed lemon juice and the same amount of olive oil.

Allow the salad to cool before you serve it. Always serve this salad with a word of waring: This salad can be habit forming. It undoubtedly has something to do with the absence of whole grains in our diet but I've seen sophisticated and very picky eaters work their way through three helpings, apologizing all the while, and then ask for a fourth.

5:45 P.M. All that remains: The Japanese vegetable pancakes. Most of the cooking done in an oriental kitchen seems to be slicing-and-dicing work.

Using a sharp knife, shred half a head of cabbage, slicing it first one way and then the other. Chop two peeled carrots as fine as possible. Peel and chop one of the onions. Chop four of the celery stalks without their leaves. Cut a green pepper into small bits.

Beat one egg for a few minutes and then mix in the can of evaporated milk. Stir in a cup of whole wheat flour and a cup of unbleached white flour. Add a teaspoon of salt and all of the chopped vegetables. Chances are the batter will be a little thick at this point. If so, add a splash of water — or maybe two splashes — until the batter is more liquid than solid.

Heat a large frying pan or griddle over medium heat and add a dab of butter or a splash of cooking oil. Using a soup ladle, pour small puddles of the batter onto the pan. Cook for three or four minues and then take a peek — when pancakes start to brown on one side, flip them over and cook until they are browned on both sides.

Don't worry about leftovers — they're excellent served cold the following day.

6:30 P.M.: Begin with the cold tomato soup, garnished with sprigs of dill or some chopped cucumber.

Followed by the wheat pilaf salad, served on a bed of lettuce or cabbage leaves. Followed by the vegetable pancakes, served with soy sauce. (Danger! No syrup.)

And followed finally by a selection of fruit and cheese.

Fruit and cheese tray rounds out vegetarian feast

Toy prices to skyrocket

MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian-made toys will cost an average five to six per cent more in the fall, while the price of plastic toys will increase as much as 30 per cent.

Frank White, chairman of the Canadian Toy Manufacturers Association, said some increases are due to the rising price of oil, which is the main component of plastic.

He said manufacturers expect electronic games to be the most popular next Christmas.

Homemade meat and baking mixes are as good or better than factory varieties

Mixes made for busy

Busy people who are looking for ways to save time in the kitchen have come to depend on convenience foods; the use of packaged mixes is a popular method of speeding up meal preparation.

Homemade mixes are easy to make, economical and can be made more nutritional than commercial mixes by the addition of wheat germ, skim milk powder and the like. In the baked goods area, mixes can be prepared for cakes, gingerbread, cookies, quickbreads and dessert toppings. Mixes for puddings and coating mixtures for meats are also easy to prepare. A ground meat mixture prepared in quantity and frozen for later use can be used for meat patties, chili, spaghetti sauce and in casseroles.

The two following basic mixes and variations will highlight the possibilities for quick food preparation when homemade mixes are used.

BASIC MEAT MIX

- 1 tbsp. cooking oil
- 1 medium onion, finely chopped
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- ¾ cup finely chopped celery
- 2 lbs. lean ground beef
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
- 1½ cups tomato sauce

Heat oil in a large skillet at medium heat. Add onion, garlic and celery. Cook until tender. And ground beef. Cook, breaking apart with a fork, until redness disappears. Add remaining ingredients. Reduce heat. Simmer, coverd, 20 minutes. Skim off fat. Cool. Spoon into frezer containers. May be stored up to 3 months in freezer. (Makes about 3 pints or 12 servings.)

MEAT SAUCE

- 1 pint basic meat mix, thawed
- 1 cup cooked sliced mushrooms
- ½ tsp. oregano
- dash cayenne pepper
- grated Parmesan cheese

Heat all ingredients except cheese in a saucepan until hot and bubbly. Serve over hot cooked spaghetti. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. (4 servings.)

SKILLET SUPPER

- 1 pint basic meat mix, thawed
- 2 cups cooked rice or macaroni
- 1 cup kernel corn
- ½ cup chopped green pepper
- Grated cheddar cheese.

BASIC BAKING MIX

- 9 cups sifted all-purpose flour
- 1 tbsp. salt
- 4 tbsp. baking powder
- 2 cups shortening

In a very large bowl, sift together flour, salt and baking powder. Cut in shortening with a pastry blender until mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Store in a tightly covered container in a cool, dry place. (Makes about 10 cups.)

BAKING POWDER BISCUITS

- 3 cups Basic Baking Mix
- ¾ cup milk

Measure mix into a large bowl. Make a well in centre. Add milk all at once and stir just until moistened. Shape into a ball. Knead about 10 times on a lightly floured board. Roll out to ½-inch thickness. Cut into 2-inch rounds; place on cookie sheet. Bake 15 minutes at 450°F (220°C). (Makes 1½ dozen.)

RAISIN MUFFINS

- 3 cups Basic Baking Mix
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 cup milk
- 1 egg
- 1 cup raisins

In a large bowl, mix together mix and sugar. Beat together milk and egg. Add to dry ingredients, stirring just until moistened. Fold in raisins. Fill greased muffin cups two-thirds full. Bake 20 to 25 minutes at 400°F. (200°C). (Makes 1 dozen.)

Golden Apple Charlotte

- 3 pounds (about 8 large) B.C. Golden Delicious apples
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- ¼ cup butter or margarine
- ¾ cup granulated sugar
- 1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
- 2 teaspoons apple pie spice
- 11-12 slices stale bread, crusts removed
- Melted butter or margarine

Peel, quarter, and core apples; sprinkle with lemon juice. Melt the 1/4 cup butter or margarine in a heavy saucepan or frypan. Add apples; cover; cook over medium heat until apples are puffy and soft, about 10 minutes. Add sugar, lemon rind, and apple pie spice. Cook uncovered until mixture is thick; set aside to cool slightly. Butter bottom and sides of a 2-quart pudding or souffle dish. Halve bread slices; dip quickly in melted butter or margarine; overlap against bottom and sides of dish. Fill dish with apple mixture; press down lightly. If bread extends above filling, snip it off with kitchen shears and drop pieces over filling. Set dish on cookie sheet. Bake at 400 degrees F. for 40 minutes. Cool 5 minutes. Loosen edges with knife; unmould onto serving dish; dust with icing sugar. Serve immediately. Serves 8–10.

An experiment in linguine

the 60-minute gourmet

Until I came to North America I had scant knowledge of Italian cooking. And my first samplings of it in America were, for the most part, Neapolitan, a robust form of cookery based largely on tomatoes and garlic. Over the years I have discovered, in kitchens both professional and private (and in the course of visits to Italy), that Italian cooking is as varied as the French and in some areas equally as subtle and sophisticated.

The first dish I can recall that impressed me was linguine with clam sauce served in two versions — white with olive oil, garlic, parsley and clam broth and red with tomato sauce added. I have made both many times for my family and friends.

It recently occurred to me that I had never eaten nor heard of linguine with oyster sauce. If the dish is good with clams, why not with oysters? Italian friends explained to me that although oysters exist in certain Italian waters — in Italy the name for oysters is ostriche — they were considered a rarity.

At that point I set about experimenting with my own version of linguine with oysters. I tried them with oil and garlic and with tomato sauces. The version that I preferred in these efforts was, perhaps, more French than Italian. It turned out to be linguine with oysters in a cream sauce made with butter, parsley, garlic and a few hot red pepper flakes. It is an incredibly simple dish to prepare and serves quite well as a main course. If you plan to make it, by all means ascertain that your oysters have sufficient liquor; you will need about half a cup.

The only accompaniment you will need for this dish is a well-flavored salad, and I propose a salad of cooked cauliflower dressed with sieved hard-cooked egg and parsley vinaigrette.

LINGUINE WITH OYSTER SAUCE

1 quart shucked oysters.
2 tablespoons butter.
¼ cup finely chopped shallots.
1 teaspoon finely chopped garlic.
1 cup heavy cream.
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.
⅛ teaspoon hot red pepper flakes.
¼ cup finely chopped parsley.
¾ pound linguine, cooked according to package directions or to.

1. Place a sieve inside a mixing bowl. Add the oysters to drain. There should be about half a cup of oyster liquor. Reserve the liquor.

2. Heat the butter in a shallow skillet and add the shallots and garlic. Cook briefly, stirring. Add the oyster liquor and bring to the boil. Add the cream, salt and pepper. Simmer, stirring often, about five minutes.

3. Add the oysters and pepper flakes. Cook about three minutes or until the oysters become plump and are heated through. Do not overcook or the oysters will toughen. Add the parsley.

4. Pour the cooked linguine into the sauce. Toss and serve.

Yield: 4 servings.

CHOUFLEUR MIMOSA (Cauliflower with egg and parsley)

1 cauliflower, about 1 pound.
¼ cup milk.
Salt to taste.
1 egg.
1 teaspoon imported mustard.
2 tablespoons wine vinegar.
6 tablespoons olive oil.
Freshly ground pepper to taste.
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley.

1. Trim off the leaves of the cauliflower. Using a sharp knife, cut away the core of the cauliflower.

2. Put the cauliflower in a saucepan with water to barely cover. Add the milk and salt to taste. Bring to the boil and simmer 15 minutes or until cauliflower is tender but not mushy. Do not overcook.

3. Drain and let cool until ready to serve. Do not chill.

4. Meanwhile, as the cauliflower cooks, cook the egg in boiling water for 12 minutes. Drain. Peel.

5. Put the egg through a fine sieve into a mixing bowl. Add the mustard and vinegar. Gradually add the oil, beating briskly with a wire whisk. Add salt and pepper to taste. Add the parsley.

6. Spoon the sauce over the cauliflower and serve.

Baked beans au cassoulet

1 pound dried red or kidney beans
6 cups water
1 onion, chopped
¼ cup molasses
1 (15-ounce) can tomato sauce
1 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. dry mustard
⅛ tsp. pepper
1 Tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 (12-ounce) package smoked sausage links, cut into 1-inch pieces.

In slow cooker, soak beans in water overnight. Cover and cook on high for 2 to 3 hours, or until tender. Drain, reserving liquid. Combine 1 cup of the liquid with onion, molasses, tomato sauce, salt, mustard, pepper and Worcestershire. Mix with drained beans in slow cooker. Cover and cook on low for 10 to 12 hours. Add sausage the last hour of cooking. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Lion ends up king of feasts

NEW YORK (UPI) — What goes with lion stew? Well, Alain Dupuis, owner of the French Shack restaurant in Manhattan, recommends wild rice and a dry burgundy.

Dupuis served lion stew at his midtown restaurant Monday to luncheon customers — "lots of business-men with expense accounts" — for $20.

He said the response "was fantastic. We've served 12 portions so far and at this rate we'll run out by the end of the week."

"It's difficult to say what it tastes like," Dupuis said. "It isn't like beef or lamb or veal. Goat tastes like lamb, black bear tastes like beef only sweeter... there's nothing like lion. I've asked some of the guests and they don't know either."

Dupuis advertised last week that he would be serving lion, an announcement that made Customs officials curious since the importation of lions into the U.S. is a violation of the Endangered Species Act.

But Dupuis said he came by his 85 pounds of lion meat legally, since the animal in question was from an overstocked game farm in the United States.

On other occasions, Dupuis has served black bear, boar and wild goat at his eatery.

While the customers couldn't get enough of the main item on his menu Monday, Dupuis said he had had about 10 phone calls from animal lovers who also are in a stew.

"They said 'You should be ashamed of yourself.'"

craig claiborne

Over the years we have often observed that there is almost no fruit, vegetable, viand or other edible delicacy that cannot be had in or out of season, given the proper purse. One notable exception is bitter oranges, which come into the New York market each year for from 7 to 14 days.

The oranges, also known as Seville or sour oranges, are grown from a root stock and are said to have first come to this country from Spain.

In any event, the principal use for the orange is in the preparation of bitter orange marmalade. We have often been asked to reprint a recipe for bitter orange marmalade, one which first appeared 20 years ago.

BITTER ORANGE MARMALADE

- 12 medium-size bitter oranges
- 4 lemons
- 3 quarts water
- Sugar.

1. Slice the oranges and lemons very thinly. Remove the seeds. Place the seeds in a muslin bag and add to the sliced fruit in a large bowl. Add the water and let stand, covered, 24 to 48 hours.

2. Transfer the fruit mixture to a saucepan and bring to the boil. Simmer gently until the peel is soft, one hour or more.

3. Discard the bag of seeds. Measure the mixture and for every cup of fruit add one cup of sugar.

4. Bring the fruit and sugar to the boil again, stirring until the sugar dissolves. Boil rapidly; the mixture is ready when slightly cooled juice in a spoon forms two large drops as it drips back into the pan from the side of the spoon. For a stiffer marmalade, let it boil until the drops run together as they fall off the spoon. Skim the foam from the surface.

5. Pour the marmalade into sterilized jars and seal. Cool and store in a cool, dry place.

Yield: About 9 pints.

Would it surprise you to learn that what has become one of the finest French restaurants in the American Hemisphere is located on a small island in the Caribbean and more specifically in the French West Indies? The island is called St.-Barthelemy, better known to its English-speaking visitors as St. Bart's, and the restaurant is called Les Castelets.

Physically, Les Castelets, located on a mountaintop and at the end of a steep road, has long been one of the best looking and comfortable restaurants anywhere. The table accouterments are notable for their style and simple beauty. The kitchen has over the years been competent without being distinguished.

I spent a few weeks on the island recently and met the young chef, Bruno Oliver. He is reed-slender, 23 years old and his background is impressive.

He is the grandson of Raymond Oliver, the celebrated owner chef of the Grand Vefour in Paris. Grandpa, so the story goes, has a mansion on one of the highest points of St. Bart's. He spends much of each winter on the island, as does his son, Michel, who also owns restaurants in Paris. Young Bruno apprenticed not only under his grandfather and father but with Troisgros and other titans of French cuisine as well. For a time he worked at the distinguished Archestrate in Paris. The Olivers agreed to let Bruno pursue his career in that idyllic spot, as master of his own kitchen.

The food is mostly nouvelle cuisine. He prepares the best langouste with a warm vinaigrette you're apt to encounter anywhere. I have dined on an uncommonly good pate of fish called a pave de l'ocean; a fine avocado mousse; fresh duck liver from France, sliced and sauteed and served warm with a cream sauce; an excellent tart of hot sliced apples, and so on.

I would not wish to dwell at too great length on this matter because Bruno's tenure, I am told, is one year, at the end of which time Raymond Oliver has promised to send another young and talented Frenchman to replace his grandson to man the kitchen. His intention is to find a replacement each year.

In any event, the cost of a dinner for three with two bottles of wine and a 15 percent service charge came to about $123.

question & answer

Q. I have eaten a vegetable in Europe that is referred to as barbe de pretre or priest's beard. Are you familiar with this?

A. In France it is better known as barbe de capucin or the beard of a Capuchin or Franciscan monk. The vegetable in question is wild chicory, a thin-stemmed green that resembles dandelion in appearance and is excellent but slightly bitter to the taste. I do not know where you can purchase wild chicory.

Q. In a recent column you spoke of a several-course meal that included "four entremets." I am confused. One source book on my shelf defines entremets as desserts. Another specifies that they are "side dishes." A. One of the most concise explanations of the term occurs in Larousse Gastronomique, which points out that the word actually means "between dishes" or "between foods." From the 14th through the 17th century in France, an entremet also meant an entertainment staged between courses by minstrels and troubadours.

"Nowadays," Larousse continues, "the word entremets means sweets and these are served in France after the cheese."

Q. Recently a new restaurant in Manhattan had on its menu green tea. Is this an herb tea?

A. There may be green herbal teas, but classic green teas — and I suspect that what you saw on that menu was one — are prepared from leaves of the tea plant.

To put it as succinctly as possible, the leaves used in the preparation of green tea or black tea are the same. The leaves are green when harvested.

Black teas are put through a fermentation or oxidation process, which accounts for their color. Green tea leaves are put through a withering or panning process, and their color when dried is much more like the original color.

Green tea is a staple in Japanese homes. It is also used in the preparation of green tea ice cream.

Readers are invited to send in questions about food and cooking techniques to the Food Editor, The New York Times, 229 West 43d Street, New York, N.Y. 10036. Unfortunately, unpublished questions cannot be answered individually.

Bouillbaisse is not just fish soup

By PAUL CHUTKOW

MARSEILLE, France (AP) — You can joke about all the pickpockets around the old Marseille port. And natives of this sea-toughened town will even laugh about being the home of heroin's French Connection.

But don't kid a Marseillais about his bouillabaisse.

"My wife takes two days to prepare a bouillabaisse," a local harbor master said recently in an unmistakable regional twang.

"And sitting down to eat it is a sacred moment, like being in church."

If you think that's a fish story, just try joking about the harbor master's seeming hyperbole with almost any other native of Marseille, home of the famous fisherman's soup.

"Mais oui, mais oui," agreed a sophisticated Marseille intellectual. "That's it exactly, just like being in church or maybe even like standing before a master painting."

To see how seriously connoisseurs, rich or poor, take their bouillabaisse — and don't dare call it "fish soup" — go a few miles east along the coast to the fishermen's village of L'Estaque, where Paul Cezanne used to paint seascapes.

There, in the shadow of a docked supertanker and beside multicolored little wooden fishing boats, there is the waterside restaurant, La Reserve, where Madame Claire Gonzalez will part with a secret or two about her two-step bouillabaisse.

To her, bouillabaisse is a way of life, changing with the seasons or with the luck of her fishermen, susceptible to mood and individual taste, even whim.

"The broth is a bit too thin," complained one customer on a recent afternoon, sending a disconsolate Madame Gonzalez flying back to her kitchen to add a little fish pulp. A single satisfied smack of the lips, on the other hand, can send her scurrying for the pear liqueur in celebration.

Unlike some provincial cooks, this Frenchwoman, married to a Spaniard, makes the soup in two steps, and she prefers to serve it with an aioli sauce of garlic and mayonnaise and "rouille" sauce of garlic, pimiento, chili pepper and a dash of saffron.

To make her reddish-orange broth, Madame Gonzalez starts with several varieties of small, soft-meat fish and adds the olive oil, tomato, garlic, onion, leeks, parsley, saffron and fennel. And whereas the harbormaster's wife simmers the broth overnight, Madame Gonzalez takes two to three hours for hers.

When she's satisfied, she strains the broth, very fine to her taste, and then puts in larger, firm-meat fish, shellfish, and a few potatoes, allowing it to cook "no longer than 20 minutes."

Rascasse, which roughly translates as "hog-fish," is the backbone of most bouillabaisse but Madame Gonzalez doesn't overdo. On this particular afternoon, she mellowed it with crayfish, small hardshell crabs and four other kinds of native, white-meat fish caught off the harbor rocks.

The broth is served first, as hot as possible and poured over toasted slices of french bread.

Liver you can live with

By HILDA BEASTALL

Wouldn't it be nice to really enjoy the weekly meal containing liver when you have been reminded that it is considered necessary for good health? Try these.

LIVER WITH RICE DUMPLINGS

15 mL soft margarine
30 mL sliced sweet onion
215 g pork liver, diced
125 mL canned tomatoes
250 mL hot water or vegetable liquid
125 mL finely diced celery with leaves
125 mL diced carrots
125 mL diced potatoes
15 mL chopped parsley
50 mL chopped spinach or chard

Rice Dumplings:
250 mL wholewheat flour
2 mL baking powder
1 mL salt
50 mL soft margarine
125 mL cooked brown rice
50 mL water or tomato juice

Prepare liver and vegetable ingredients in order listed; start with onions cooked in margarine in large saucepan until soft. Then add liver and cook for three minutes, then vegetables as they are prepared, bringing each to a gentle boil. Cover.

Dumplings: mix flour, baking powder and salt; cut in margarine.

Stir in cooked brown rice, mixing with small amount water or juice until mixture holds together in firm small balls.

Skillet Liver with Vegetables: Skillet cooking is another easy way of serving liver. It is important to know that overcooking toughens the fiber. Ten to 15 minutes of gentle simmering is enough to cook through small diced liver.

SKILLET LIVER WITH VEGETABLES

215 g pork liver, diced small
125 mL slivered carrots with turnip
1 thinly sliced garlic clove
30 mL chopped celery leaves

Cook gently together in a covered skillet or frypan with water or tomato juice to barely cover liver. Lightly season with salt, a little curry powder, or your choice of fresh herbs.

Serve with cooked shell macaroni; spoon gravy over all. Serves 4.

Now for something different that can be taken out to enjoy on a winter picnic.

FAGGOTS

215 g pork liver, fine diced
3 slices fat and lean bacon, cut fine
5 mL fine cut sweet onion
1 small egg
30 mL wholewheat flour
Pinch salt, sage and thyme
Water to mix
500 mL soft wholewheat breadcrumbs

Soak breadcrumbs with egg and seasonings with the water until almost a batter-like texture. Mix with prepared liver, bacon and onion.

Grease a 20 cm x 20 cm square pan. Spread mixture evenly. Mark into 25 squares of equal size, cutting down with sharp knife.

Bake in fairly hot oven, 190 to 220 deg. c, for about 30 minutes. Cover with cooking foil or parchment to prevent scorching or drying.

Serve hot or cold; with a hot green vegetable, or a wedge of green cabbage for salad. Serves 6 or 8 depending whether on a picnic or at home.

Before the judge

Three persons were committed for higher court trial by Judge Blake Allan on charges of attempted murder and possession of a pipe dangerous to the public peace following a preliminary hearing in provincial court Tuesday.

William Lloyd Christie, 44, of 623 Raynor, William Richard Johnson, 34, of 512 Joffre, and Ardiene Elizabeth Langer, 35, of 1027 Colville, were charged following an incident Dec. 23 at Victoria General Hospital in which patient Terrence Roy Adams was allegedly beaten.

Judge William Ostler handed 18-year-old Gordon Raymond Portice concurrent, 10-month jail terms after the youth pleaded guilty to two counts of breaking and entering.

Portice admitted breaking into the Highlander Restaurant, 707 Pandora, and Murray Goldman's Men's Wear, 1316 Douglas.

Smith said undercover police officers first spoke with Portice at 2:30 a.m. Wednesday in Bastion Square when the youth, drinking beer at the time, said that if someone needed money he should break into business premises without alarms.

At 4 a.m., Smith continued, a city street cleaner saw Portice standing in the doorway of the Highlander and the glass door had been broken. He contacted police and officers caught Portice running at Douglas and Yates streets an hour later.

About $10 in coins had been taken in each of the two break-ins.

Portice had convictions Nov. 6, 1978, for breaking and entering as well as possession of stolen property, getting a four-month sentence and six months probation on each concurrently; and Dec. 20, 1979, for theft over $200, receiving a suspended sentence and probation.

Ostler noted that Portice was on that probation and was also facing a county court trial on another charge when he committed the break-ins.

The judge said he would recommend the Boulder Bay program and also placed Portice on an 18-month probation.

Robert Scott McIntosh, 17, of 949 Pemberton, was given nine months by Allan for theft under $200 and ordered to pay $1,464.45 restitution to his former employer, Old British Fish and Chips, 1507 Pandora.

McIntosh pleaded guilty Jan. 9 and was remanded for a pre-sentence report.

Court was informed McIntosh was a cook at the shop since last September and had made arrangements for a $1,500 drug deal. He borrowed the money from a friend, handed it over, but did not receive the drugs.

The friend who lent McIntosh the money began exerting pressure and suggested McIntosh rob his boss.

McIntosh at first was not in favor, but decided to do it later, taking money from the till and safe on Dec. 29 to repay the loan. He packed his bags and left Victoria for Duncan, but returned Jan. 9 and surrendered.

He was only able to supply police with the first name of the person who lent him the money and an address of Chilliwack.

A 25-year-old was given a suspended sentence, 18 months probation, and 150 hours of community service work after pleading guilty to four break-ins and one attempted break-in Jan. 4 at a Central Saanich shopping centre.

Noble Neil Saunders, no fixed address, changed his pleas to guilty in connection with break-ins at the Brentwood Cleaners, Brentwood Reddi Chef, Trafalgar Hair Trend, and Brentwood Florists, and an attempted break-in at Village Toy Shop, all in the 7100-block West Saanich Road.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said $22 was taken from the cleaning establishment, $80 from the Reddi Chef, $142 from the beauty salon, and nothing from the other two businesses. Damage to all establishments was estimated at $160.

Defence lawyer Victor Simpson said Saunders, a racetrack exercise boy in Victoria, Vancouver, and Seattle, was drinking at the time and was depressed over his financial position.

Ostler said he was taking into consideration the fact Saunders had already spent a month in jail awaiting trial.

A Calgary couple was remanded in custody until Friday on weapons and other charges.

Robert Irvine Scullion, 24, and Donna Lee Curda, 22, were jointly charged with possession of an unregistered handgun, occupying a vehicle knowing there was a restricted weapon in it, possession of two stolen calculators and a stolen cassette player, and possession of 26 stolen Gulf Oil credit cards. Scullion was charged separately with possession of a restricted, spring-loaded knife.

Saanich police stopped a vehicle shortly after 1 p.m. Monday on Harriet near Gorge and arrested three persons after finding a loaded .22-calibre revolver in the trunk.

Bowlers to roll for kids

The "Bowl for Millions" fund-raising project of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters organization in Victoria starts Saturday, Feb. 9, and Victoria bowlers can participate until Feb. 16.

It's the only fund-raising project carried out by the organization, which receives funding from the United Way.

The organization provides big brothers and sisters to youngsters from single-parent families.

Bowlers are asked to pledge on a pennies-per-point system at either Wilson Bowladrome or Town and Country Bowling Lanes, says Jane Anderson of Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

Last year $8,000 was raised and the organization hopes to top that this year.

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber, honorary chairman for this year's event, will be on hand Saturday, Celebrity Day, when organizers hope well-known Greater Victorians will help kick off the week's activities.

Anderson said the Big Brothers and Big Sisters program has about 80 youngsters with another 40 boys on the waiting list.

"There is always a shortage of big brothers and always an excess of big sisters," she said.

Series to peek at kings

Kings will be subject of four evening lectures starting Thursday at the University of Victoria.

The extension program offers a look behind the scenes in the lives of French, English, Austrian and Russian monarchs, with commentaries on their personalities in the four-lecture series at 7:30 p.m.

A series of 10 lectures on Native Languages of B.C. is under way every Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Newcombe auditorium at the Provincial Museum. It is tailored for persons without a background in linguistics.

A Monday night series of five lectures on how to buy, build or sell a home also has started.

Peru's fishing disaster was avoidable

A Peruvian fishing disaster in 1972-73 could have been eased if politicians had heeded warnings against overfishing the country's important anchovy harvest, a visiting scientist has told a Patricia Bay seminar.

Michael H. Glantz, a member of the environmental and social impacts group at the National Centre for Atmospheric Research at Boulder, Colo., spoke at a meeting sponsored by the Canadian Meteorological and Oceanographic Society.

Glantz said Peruvian policy makers were getting two sets of advice on the anchovy fishery, which gives Peru the world record tonnage of fish landings.

Scientists studying a phenomenon called el nino — a periodic flow of warm offshore water which kills the plankton on which anchovies feed — were able to predict roughly when it would occur with devastating impact.

"Peruvian scientists were giving good advice, but it wasn't being listened to," Glantz said.

They advised the ministers responsible for fisheries to place catch limits on the fishery but commercial interests urged that the harvest go on, arguing that if the fishing fleet didn't get the anchovies, el nino would.

The companies also feared neighboring Chile might reap the harvest, which rose like a meteor in the 1950s to 3.5 million metric tons by 1960.

Glantz said the opposing sets of advice cancelled each other and the fishery went on, reaching an epic 12.5 million tons by 1970.

Another significant enterprise also depended on the small fish — the mining of guano — bird droppings harvested for agricultural fertilizer.

The minor el nino phenomenon normally occurred annually without effect upon the fishery because prevailing winds usually thrust the warm layer aside, allowing nutrient-rich cold water from the deep Pacific to surge up where the anchovies thrive.

But when it occurred in 1972-73, the winds failed to materialize and the warm layer of water overlaid the cold, cutting off the food source for plankton and juvenile fish and the seabirds which feed on them.

It lasted a year and vast number of birds and fish died or were dispersed.

To add to the situation, another moderate el nino occurred in 1976, delaying the fishery recovery and cutting the harvest to less than two million tons that year.

After the disaster, the fishery eased up and the catch has been maintained at about 2 million metric tons up to last year.

Canadian oceanographers are among researchers studying the el nino phenomenon. They suspect a link between biological productivity and the occurrence although this this is as yet unproven.

Glantz said the Peruvian experience is a valuable one for such places as Mauritania, which is in one of four other areas of the oceans with upwelling of nutrient-rich waters and, hence, rich fisheries.

'I'm going to kill you'

A 40-year-old woman and her friend testified in B.C. Supreme Court Tuesday they were struck on the head by the woman's husband in a Glanford Avenue house shortly after midnight April 28.

Maureen Carter and June Burns said they were struck by Kenneth Lucas Carter, separated from his wife, who was wielding a socket wrench.

Carter is accused of attempting to murder his wife and wounding her with intent and with assault causing bodily harm to Burns.

Mrs. Carter said her husband came to the Burns house where she was staying a month after their separation and told her "I feel really sorry for you, I'm going to kill you" and pulled out the wrench.

She said she was struck on her head and arm at least five or six times and possibly seven times. She was screaming for help and Burns' son Kevin came in and said "oh God Ken, you don't want to do that, do you. Stop it." She said Carter stopped but said "yes I do, yes I do want to kill her."

According to Mrs. Carter, her husband said "she's ruined my life and I'm going to kill her."

Mrs. Carter said she didn't start working again as a belly dancer until last October and denied dancing at a legion in Victoria on May 10 or 11 because she had a cast on her arm and was in Vancouver.

She also said that four days after the incident she was admitted to hospital for 10 days with concussion.

But Crown counsel George MacMinn and defence counsel Jeff Green told Mr. Justice Howard Callagan after her testimony that a check showed that while she was admitted to hospital, it was for an emotional problem and not for concussion.

Mrs. Carter told Green in cross-examination that her husband didn't suspect that her belly dancing was leading to relationships with men but he was a jealous man from the first day they were married 20 years ago.

She said Carter asked her before the incident if she was going away that weekend and she seemed to recall saying that she was and "what if I am." She said she had a dancing date at a Nanaimo restaurant and was angry at him using their daughter to find out her plans.

She told the earlier preliminary hearing she believed he had could have killed her if he wanted to but she said Tuesday she didn't know now. If they had been alone, he could have, but there were others, and she didn't know.

Other than the first few years of marriage, when there was some physical "bantering" involving exchanges of blows, Carter had not hit her during their marriage.

Burns said she left the living room of her house after Carter entered and raised his voice to his wife.

While in her bedroom, she heard screams and shouts of "I'll kill you, I'll kill you both." She went to the living room and saw Carter standing over his wife with the wrench in his hand coming down on her. She jumped on his back and was shaken off, picked up several times and thrown, and struck on the shoulder and head.

She denied going to her sleeping 17-year-old son's room for help but her son testified she did and he went to the living room where he saw Carter standing with the wrench above his shoulder.

He asked what was going on and told Carter to put it down. Carter started talking "about killing these bitches. He said he had nothing to live for."

The trial was to continue today.

GERRY KRISTIANSON
He Knows How To Deal With Government

Occasionally, one finds a candidate for public office whose qualifications and record of public service draws widespread support across normal party lines and from people in all walks of life.

Dr. Gerry Kristianson is such a candidate. His background as a scholar, a university professor, a Canadian diplomat, an executive assistant, and a local businessman, has given him skills which will ensure that the voters of Esquimalt-Saanich are well represented in Ottawa.

His record during six years as a school trustee in Saanich and during two years as School Board Chairman shows that he is one of the few elected officials who can ensure that the public receives good value for its hard-earned tax dollars.

We, the undersigned believe Gerry Kristianson would make an outstanding Member of Parliament. We urge his support by Esquimalt-Saanich voters.

Kemano II not dead: McClelland

VANCOUVER (CP) — The controversial Kemano II project can still be built despite a stated hard-line stance by the provincial government which would ban all private hydro electric dams on B.C. rivers, provincial Energy Minister Bob McClelland said Tuesday.

McClelland said repeatedly that "our policy is clear" on the matter of hydro electric development in B.C. However, he conceded that there are several ways the dam could still be built: either by B.C. Hydro itself, by the Aluminum Company of Canada, or by a cooperative effort between the two.

"I don't know what the possibilities are," McClelland said.

Alcan Smelters and Chemicals, a subsidiary of the Aluminum Co., holds a water rights licence issued in 1950 when the original Kemano dam was constructed near Kitimat. The allowance allows it to construct another dam to increase its smelting power. That dam would be known as Kemano II, and would cost about $800 million.

A clause in the energy policy states that separate arrangements could be worked out to provide power for private industrial projects outside of Hydro's existing power grid.

Through that clause, private interests could "put some up-front money forward (with) "Hydro acting as the developer" by building the dam for the industries, McClelland said.

He said that clause would apply only to smaller projects and not to major developments such as Kemano II.

Alcan would have to justify the need for increased hydro-electric power, and would "go through all the necessary procedures to determine its environmental impact." he said.

McClelland did not elaborate on those procedures.

Several environmental groups and the Native Brotherhood of B.C. have demanded that public hearings and environmental impact studies be held to find what effect that dam would have on the surrounding area.

Alcan said Tuesday it will proceed with its planned Kemano power project expansion regardless of the government's declaration.

The company said in a news release it fully expects to meet the requirements of a new provincial energy policy.

The company statement came after suggestions in Victoria that there would be discussions between Alcan and B.C. Hydro about the future of the development, which has been in the planning stages since Alcan obtained a water licence in 1950 and built the first phase of the project.

Ted France, energy adviser to the minister, said Monday a court battle could ensue if B.C. Hydro attempted to take over the proposed $800-million, 1,020-megawatt power station.

A senior official in the ministry said Tuesday he expects McClelland will meet Alcan officials soon to work out how the new energy policy will be applied to the Kemano project.

A spokesman for the B.C. Energy Commission, which will be supplanted by the B.C. Utilities Commission announced Monday, said the energy commission has not taken a stand on the issue.

Library re-elects Whittaker

Victoria lawyer Michael Whittaker Tuesday was re-elected chairman of the Greater Victoria Public Library board.

Also re-elected by acclamation for a second term as vice-chairman was civil servant and Esquimalt alderman Larry Mann.

One of the major projects facing the board this year will be moving the central library, scheduled for March, to the new government building on Broughton Street.

Labor row cut Doman net

Doman Industries Ltd. of Duncan says a labor dispute led to a small reduction in net earnings for 1979, compared with 1978.

Profits totalled $10,680,000 last year, down from $10,789,000.

Earnings per share were $1.62. In 1978 the per share earnings had been $1.64 plus four cents from sale of assets.

Sales totalled $113 million, down from $115 million.

President Herb Doman said the company lost 16 days of production during wage negotiations.

He said the work stoppage cost the company 12 cents per share in net earnings.

In addition, the volume of lumber sold in the fourth quarter was reduced because of shipping schedules and therefore sales and profits were lower than expected.

The outlook for this year is good, he said. The company's new sawmill at Nanaimo will go into production in mid-year and this will increase Doman's annual lumber production to above 500 million board feet from more than 300 board feet.

"There is a worldwide demand for housing," Doman said.

"In the U.S. it is estimated that some 22 million new housing units will be needed in the next 10 years.

"The demand for new housing together with lumber consumed in renovations and other construction will create strong and sustained markets for lumber in this period."

Doman Industries had a cash flow from operations of $16.9 million in 1979, compared with $14.2 million the previous year.

Cash flow in 1978 had been only $8.5 million. Sales in 1978 had been $92 million and net earnings that year reached only $5.8 million.

Helliwell to speak

David Helliwell, president and chief executive officer of the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. will address the Men's Canadian Club at noon Thursday in the Old Forge.

Grace granted

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec department of transport has granted a two-month grace period to motorists whose drivers' licences expire in January or February. A transport spokesman said the deadline was extended due to a clerical backlog caused by civil servant walkouts last year.

80th anniversary of IODE Feb. 13

The National Chapter of the IODE will mark its 80th anniversary February 13.

The IODE, a Canadian women's organization, provides assistance to a variety of community service projects.

The organization has provided $40,000 worth of new clothing for boat people refugee camps, $1,000 for a horse given to a group providing riding for disabled people, $50,000 to furnish a replica of a prime minister's office in the Diefenbaker Cultural Centre and $15,000 for a library in the Pauline McGibbon Cultural Centre.

"Government cutbacks in funds allotted to education and social services leave huge gaps which can only be filled through volunteer efforts," the IODE said in a prepared statement.

Ocean studies limited

The shrinking federal research dollar has reduced progress on oceanographic programs at the Institute of Ocean Sciences, director-general Dr. Cedric Mann said in an interview Monday.

"But we're managing to keep all programs going," he said, indicating that field work for the 1980 season will concentrate in the Arctic.

Mann said only a handful of scientific personnel have been lost as a result of spending cutbacks.

However, he said, the departure of highly specialized researchers and technicians makes it more difficult to embark on new projects.

Mann said there will be no major shift in spending over last year.

Emphasis will be on Arctic hydrography, relating to the petroleum industry, transportation and supply.

The bulk of field work initiated last year on the Pacific continental shelf is complete, and the foreseeable future will be devoted to analysis and understanding what has been learned, Mann said.

"The results so far look like this is an informative and exciting program."

Lecture cruises offered

A chance to be all at sea at school is being offered for summer and fall by the Open Learning Institute of B.C. in conjunction with Capilano College.

Bookings on two non-profit, learn-as-you-cruise P&O Line vacations are available through the colleges for amounts ranging from $2,150 to $3,100, including air fare to and from Europe.

The cruises offer a tour manager and on-board lectures introducing ports of call, their history, culture and attractions for a Baltic trip July 18-Aug. 4 and a Mediterranean sailing Oct. 19-Nov. 5.

Only 15 bookings are being offered for each cruise and interested persons may obtain information or reserve space either through Dr. Bob Gallacher at OLI, 7671 Alderbridge Way, Richmond, V6X 1Z9, or Wanda Tilley, Capilano College, 2055 Purcell Way, North Vancouver, V7J 3H5.

Public lectures

Two lectures in the University of Victoria Lansdowne scholar series will be given Thursday in the Maclaurin building.

At 11:30 a.m. in room D288, Dr. Malcolm Knowles, professor emeritus of adult education at North Carolina State University, speaks on the challenge posed to universities by returning adult learners.

Dr. Donald Treffinger, professor of creative studies at State University College in Buffalo, will speak at 8 p.m. in room 144 on new directions for educating gifted, talented and creative students.

Family council courses begin

The Capital Region Branch of the B.C.Council for the Family has launched a course to provide parents with information on child development.

The first part of the course began today and it will continue each Wednesday to February 27.

Substitutes listed for banned sprays

The city parks department has outlined its 1980 herbicide and insecticide spraying program utilizing a variety of substitutes for 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T which last year's city council banned for three years.

For weed control, parks administrator Al Smith told council's parks and recreation committee on Tuesday his staff plan to use Ureabor (for complete sterilization of ground), trifluralin (to prevent weed germination in planters) and Dowpon and Simazine to keep weeds out of grassy boulevards.

Dicamba or mecoprop, both phenoxyacetic herbicides, can be used for general weed control, Smith said, while on a trial basis the department is considering a mixture of ammonium sulphate and sand to control dandelion and plantain.

These last two weeds used to be kept down by 2,4-D. The parks department said last year that without it, playing fields might become somewhat dangerous to rugby and soccer players because of the growth of "tufty weeds."

For insects, the department will continue to use malathion and diazinon for aphid control, but only on maple, birch and hawthorn trees, rose bushes and other plants.

Where possible, insecticide soap will be used in conjunction with the chemicals, reducing its requirement by half, Smith said.

Methoxychlor plus soap will be used where needed to control work-type pests including caterpillars. Smith added that the parks department continues to work with the federal government to develop a local predator population of wasps to attack the damaging winter moth caterpillars.

"Where possible we are currently progressing with replanting or replacing trees that have a strong resistance to insects and disease," Smith added.

Athletic board approved

A bylaw to re-establish an athletic commission to regulate professional boxing, wrestling and similar activities in Victoria was approved in principle Tuesday by city council's parks and recreation committee.

City solicitor Jakob de Villiers drafted the bylaw, which will set up a commission consisting of a doctor, a lawyer and someone involved in professional sport.

A pro middleweight boxer in the Coast Guard named Jerry Reddick, who fights under the name Mack Truck, had asked council permission to fight professionally at the city-owned Memorial Arena.

But arena manager Jack Morgan had to turn him down because Victoria has no boxing commission. Over the objections of some aldermen that boxing was a cruel and vicious sport, recreation committee chairman Ald. Ken Sinclair convinced council to go ahead.

The committee referred the bylaw back to de Villiers for some minor changes before it come up for final approval at city council next week.

Roller skaters face ban on paths in city parks

Roller skaters will soon be banned from using paths in city parks.

Victoria's parks and recreation committee voted unanimously Tuesday to beef up the parks bylaw to prohibit skaters on park paths.

"There is an increasing use of park paths by roller skaters, who appear to have a very high degree of contempt for persons walking in the same areas," said parks administrator Al Smith.

Aldermen delay Topaz Park plan

The city's parks administrator wants to spend $261,000 to establish a soccer-softball sports ground on Topaz park at Blanshard and Finlayson but council's recreation committee Tuesday referred the proposal to the city manager.

One-third of the money would be available from the province, parks chief Al Smith said in a letter to council, but Ald. Bob Wright suggested the project is under consideration only because a senior government is offering a financial incentive.

Smith's proposal would see bleachers, a press box and field lighting erected on the former waste property behind S.J. Willis high school. Some $15,000 was spent last year in preliminary work on the site.

The committee referred the proposal back to city manager Jim Bramley for a further report.

Digital robber fingers clerk

LONGVIEW, Tex. (AP) — A masked bandit walked into a convenience store, brandished his forefinger and thumb and demanded that the clerk empty the cash register. It worked.

Police say that the clerk asked whether the bandit was serious. When he said yes, the clerk handed over an undetermined amount of money.

Opening lead — ace of hearts.

It is difficult to exaggerate the importance of the opening lead. Lots of contracts stand or fall, depending on the opening lead that is selected, and it is not uncommon for a player to say that he loses more tricks on the opening lead than on the next twelve tricks combined.

The truth is that a defender, after listening carefully to the bidding and seeing only his own 13 cards, is often still in the dark when it comes to choosing his opening lead. The scene changes, though, after dummy appears and everyone sees 13 additional cards; it then becomes much easier to defend more effectively later on.

Let's consider this deal, a rather extreme example, taken from a rubber bridge game. West was on lead against seven clubs doubled and started with the ace of hearts. As a result, South made the grand slam for a score of 2,330 points. Had West led a diamond, South would have gone down one and lost 200 points.

But note also that if West had become declarer at seven hearts, it would have required North to lead a spade in order to stop the grand slam.

Furthermore, had North become declarer at seven diamonds, East would have had to find an opening club lead to prevent a grand slam in diamonds from being scored against him.

And finally, had East wound up as declarer at seven spades — which he might have bid under the circumstances in order to protect himself from suffering a possible huge loss — South would have required almost divine guidance to produce the heart lead that would be needed to stop that grand slam from being made.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Go slow, lie low, measure loves, actions, work with time as an ally, play waiting game. Legal affairs, close associations, partnership and marriage dominate scenario. Read between the lines — you are due to rebound from setback.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make inquiries, stress versatility, avoid long-standing financial commitment. Stress humor, adaptability. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently — and so does the number 3. Plant seeds for future expansion.

IF FEBRUARY 7 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have unusual tastes in art, literature and motion pictures. You are unorthodox, prescient, spiritual as contrasted to "religious." Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. August could be your most significant month of 1980, a year which sees you gaining wider recognition and being free of burden. Efforts you put forth in 1979 will pay dividends during this year. You are unique, a perfectionist, sensitive and you adore "surprise parties." You'll be a part of many of them in March.

By J. A. H. HUNTER

Simple Simon had his pencil ready. "Okay," said Miss Mullins. "Just square our number, and then subtract it from the result."

Simon halved the number and then added it!

"Now divide by three and subtact four," his teacher continued. "Then let me see what you've got."

The boy multiplied by three and added four instead. But surprise! He ended up with the right answer!

A symbol-minded conversation by two bird brains

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Ever wonder what birds would say if they could talk? Well, judging from the first known bird conversation on record, their chitchat probably would include food.

In an experiment directed at Harvard by noted behaviorist B.F. Skinner, "two pigeons engaged in a sustained and natural conversation without human intervention," says a scientific report.

The discussion, of course, involved bird feed.

Pecking away in adjoining cages, the birds were able to award each other handouts of grain by correctly identifying hidden colors.

The adventures of this boy-girl team of white Carneaux pigeons, named Jack and Jill, were described in a report in the journal Science.

The experimenters set up the feathery conversation by placing the birds in side-by-side cages separated by a Plexiglas partition.

After some training, Jack started things off by pressing a button labelled, "What color?" Seeing this through the partition, Jill stuck her head through a curtain and peeked at a color. Then she pecked at a key in her cage identifying the color as "R" for red, "G" for green or "Y" for yellow.

At this point, Jack hit a button labelled "thank you," and a bit of grain poured out in Jill's cage. Then Jack pecked a color-coded button in his cage that corresponded to the letter pressed by Jill and got his reward.

The researchers say the two birds carried on this way without any prompting from humans.

"If one delayed in depressing a key, the other often vigorously pecked at the restraining partition," they said.

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Get your allotment of healthy savings

The continuously rising costs of vegetables is already causing some apartment and condominium dwellers to think again of owning a house with property. They figure it would pay them even with the more labor in maintenance.

Before making such a drastic change, I would suggest these people should explore the use of an allotment plot. It will also provide the pleasant exercise required, in addition to monetary savings.

Each spring there are vacancies for new plot holders to pick up, since people move or become unable to work the plot. This is an early reminder that enquiries now will ensure a start as soon as local soils are workable.

Plots are approximately 1.000 square feet in size; the annual rental fee is $20. In addition to the use of the plot of ground, water is provided, plus parking, picnic areas and toilet facilities.

Guidance in getting started is available if desired from an allotment supervisor whose time is split between the various sites in Greater Victoria.

Also there are usually executive members of the Capital City Allotment Gardens Association working on their plots who are willing to offer guidance on a problem. The interchange of communication between the gardeners is appreciated by most, who benefit from the friendly atmosphere and look forward to the time they spend at their gardening as a therapeutic, relaxing experience. There is too the pleasure of the take-home prizes of produce you have grown.

When you think of your favorite vegetables and their retail cost, try to realize with your own time spent working on your rented 20 by 50 feet plot you can raise continuous crops from sowing time outdoors of some crops in April until first hard frosts in October.

Many plot holders raise green peas, beans, various green, leafy vegetables and sweet corn for freezing as well as whatever is needed during the growing months.

Also favorites are green cabbage, cauliflower, onion, garlic and carrots; while various green salad crops are a continuing delight through the season. These latter must however be sown a few seeds every two weeks the same way as radishes or there will be a 20-foot row of lettuce or radish going to seed and quite inedible.

To many, it is appealing to have a variety of deliciously flavored vegetables to choose from at each visit to the plot. It spurs the imagination. When one crop is almost finished, a few enquiries around will get ideas for something new perhaps to those from other parts of Canada.

With a balcony at the home base, it is possible to raise the few seedlings required of vegetables such as the cabbage family, tomato plants, sweet peppers, eggplants, the different kinds of lettuce and also curly endive, celtuce, your favorrite kinds of squash and a couple of cucumber plants.

Grow these on the balcony in containers so that by the time the soil is warm at the allotment site and night temperatures are suitable, transplanting can be done without disturbance of the roots and the young plants will be large enough and hardy enough to be in the exposed situation.

Meanwhile the hardier kinds of vegetables can be sown right into the rows where they will grow.

If new to vegetable growing, you will learn by doing and by asking questions and reading. Since few of us were born knowing how to do this work, we too had to learn. Nothing is impossible or even difficult if you're interested.

Give this idea of an allotment garden some thought now. Time passes quickly. March will be with us in three weeks. With a decision made and a plot allocated in your name, you can go ahead with seed sowing on a balcony in preparation for taking part in this growing scheme now entering its sixth year.

For more information and registration contact: Allotment Gardens Supervisor, Horticultural Branch, B.C. Ministry of Agriculture, Parliament Bldgs., Victoria, B.C. V8W 2Z7, or phone 387-5121 local 237, or direct to the Supervisor D. Keepence at 479-8421.

Parenthood group funds cut?

By BRENDA DALGLISH

The Planned Parenthood Association of Victoria may have its education program lopped off because of a budget cutback by the provincial ministry of health.

Pearl Denny, education co-ordinator for the Victoria office of Planned Parenthood, said Tuesday she is operating during February on funds contributed from volunteers' honorariums while she waits word from the ministry on a grant application.

The original funding cutback came almost immediately after Health Minister Rafe Mair strongly criticized the high rate of abortions in the province and called for more sex education in schools, said Denny.

She said she's been told the first application for funding was turned down at the deputy ministers' level but the current application has passed that level and is awaiting the minister's consideration.

Denny said in January the provincial association learned the ministry wasn't willing to fund any of its education programs in the province.

But since that time the ministry has agreed to reconsider the funding request and the association has resubmitted applications.

The first budget submitted by the Victoria office for the education program amounted to $38,000 for Denny's salary and office supplies including education material.

The budget now being considered is for $52,000, she said, which is an increase because she has asked for a second educator. She says she isn't hopeful the additional request will be approved but the need is there.

The function of the education section of the association is to provide somebody capable of talking to groups about areas of sex educations, she said.

Denny speaks to school classes, military groups and staff members of group homes. She is prepared to speak on aspects of sex education or on methods of dealing with teaching sex education as needed, for example, by staff members of group homes.

Denny has worked with planned parenthood for about 10 years but mainly as a volunteer. The education program has been funded for three years through a federal program that expired early this year, Denny said.

The province originally turned down a funding request for a total of $138,000 for education programs throughout the province sponsored by Planned Parenthood, said Catherine Mooney of the provincial office. The province did approve expenditure of $88,000 for the operation of birth control clinics and general administration costs.

CFB pot case ruling withheld

The Supreme Court of Canada has reserved decision on the case of Pte. Robert Cameron Mackay who says his conviction by an Esquimalt military court martial contravenes basic civil liberties.

Mackay was convicted by a one-man standing court martial in April, 1977, of seven counts of possession and trafficking marijuana at CFB Esquimault.

He was sentenced to 60 days' detention in an Edmonton military prison.

Mackay's lawyer, Brian Crane, argued that Mackay was deprived of the right to a "fair, impartial and independent tribunal" and of equality before the law as defined by the Canadian Bill of Rights.

He also contended that a military prosecutor has no right to conduct proceedings against anyone charged with violating the Criminal Code or Narcotics Control Act.

Crane said he was not contesting the military's right to try soldiers for criminal offences in time of war or outside Canada, but insisted a court martial distributes swift "harsh justice," which another person would not expect from a civilian court.

Counsel for the military, T. B. Smith, argued that those enlisting in the armed forces are made aware of the special laws governing them.

"The military has historically enjoyed a separate set of laws," he said.

"In fact there may be some benefit for the accused to be tried by men who know the military system as well as the law."

Star building purchase set

MONTREAL (CP) — The publisher of the Gazette says tentative agreements have been reached with three unions representing workers at the defunct Montreal Star which will pave the way for the purchase of that paper's empty building.

Robert McConnell said in an interview Tuesday that talks with the Unions representing journalists, pressmen and typographers have produced tentative agreements whereby the last of the 969 former employees of the Star will waive their union rights and allow decertification of their bargaining units.

The Montreal Star ceased publication Sept. 25, 1979, in the aftermath of an eight-month strike by pressmen.

The Quebec Labor Code requires the Gazette, or any other firm acquiring the assets of the paper, to honor collective agreements already in force.

McConnell said the agreement included no guarantees to hire former Star employees. He said the Gazette would probably hire "several dozen" press and typographical workers, but added that the newspaper's editorial section was "fully staffed" after hiring 15 Star editorial workers when the paper closed.

2 more Bolshoi defections

The defectors are 31-year-old Mikhail Messerer, an occasional solo performer with the Bolshoi and a nephew of the Soviet Union's leading ballerina, Maya Plisetskaya, and his 71-year-old mother, Soulamif Mikhailovna Messerer, a teacher with the troupe.

Mikhail's uncle, Asaf Messerer, 76, is also in Japan with the Bolshoi but did not defect. He is a former star dancer, one of the Soviet Union's leading ballet teachers, holds the title of People's Artist of the Russian Federation and was honored on his 70th birthday with a gala evening at the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow.

Like Rudolf Nureyev, Natalia Makarova, Mikhail Baryshnikov and other Soviet dancers who have defected to the West, the Messerers said they were seeking greater artistic freedom, the Japanese foreign ministry and the U.S. embassy said.

Three other Bolshoi dancers defected during the company's tour of the North America last summer. They included Alexander Godunov, one of the stars of the company.

U.S. Embassy spokesman John Ohta said Messerer and his mother "came to the embassy yesterday and asked for our assistance in entering the United States."

"They wanted a freer environment for artistic activities."

The Messerers spent Tuesday night in the protective custody of Japanese authorities and then confirmed their desire to emigrate to the U.S. in a conversation today with a Soviet embassy official, the foreign ministry said.

The Soviet embassy would not comment, but the defections are sure to pique the Kremlin, already under fire around the world for its military intervention in Afghanistan and banishment of dissident leader Andrei Sakharov.

The 97-member Bolshoi troupe arrived in Tokyo on Jan. 24 for a 12-city tour of Japan. Its first performance was in Tokyo on Saturday.

Three other Soviet citizens have defected to the United States while in Japan in the last seven months.

The last one was Stanislav Levtchenko, a 38-year-old journalist for New Times magazine who asked for political asylum Oct. 25 and was flown out the same day. Two members of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra, a man and a woman, were granted political asylum in the U.S. during a visit in June, and a computer engineer defected in September.

Jobless at 6.2% in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment in the United States was worse last year than in Japan, West Germany and Sweden but lower than in Canada or France, a U.S. labor department report shows.

The rate for the U.S. was 5.8 per cent in 1979 but rose to 6.2 per cent in January of this year.

The labor department has worked out a method of adapting the figures issued in other countries to the definition of joblessness used in the United States.

By that standard, Japan's unemployment was slightly lower in 1979 than in 1978 and by the end of December it had reached only 2.2 per cent. Sweden's figures, although not yet reported for the entire year, appear to be under 2.5 per cent. The number of unemployed in West Germany declined steadily in 1979 and was put at three per cent.

In Britain, the average for the year was the same as in the United States — 5.8 per cent. In France it reached 6.1 per cent.

Canada's figure was 7.5 per cent, down from 8.4 per cent in 1978.

Canada's rate rose from a low of 5.4 per cent in 1974 to the 1978 high of 8.4.

Bargain: just add 165 gal. and stir

SEATTLE (AP) — For housewives who shop for grocery bargains as if their life depended on it, the U.S. Customs Service has a great buy on frozen orange juice concentrate.

One drum of the concentrate is included in an auction of seized, abandoned and unclaimed goods.

You mix it the same as you would a can of frozen orange juice from your grocery store — just add three parts water. In this case, however, that's 165 gallons added to the 55-gallon drum.

Once a year the agency auctions off the goods. Other items on the block include ivory, jade, jewelry, deadbolt locks, bikinis — 221 tops and 177 bottoms — office items, books and canned food.

John Bergquist, senior customs inspector, said the sale will include a seized $330,000 shipment of ivory and jade jewelry.

Cambodian hush for marchers

ARANYAPRATHET (AP) — More than 120 Europeans and Americans, including several celebrities, marched to a bridge leading from Thailand into Cambodia today — but their plea to enter the war-wracked country with relief supplies was met with silence.

Using a microphone, three march organizers issued an appeal "to those who've been standing on the other side of the border" to allow the entry of 20 truckloads of relief supplies and a medical team to help "survivors of a too-long tragedy."

More than a dozen guards — either Vietnamese or Cambodians loyal to the government of Heng Samrin — had been sighted earlier on the other side of the narrow metal span marking the frontier between the two countries, but there was no response to the marchers' request.

Group members then sat down on the sun-scorched road leading to the border and for five minutes were asked to meditate on the "fragility of life" and "the difficulty of obtaining peace."

U.S. civil rights activist Bayard Rustin, a veteran of U.S. freedom marches, led the group in singing We Shall Overcome, and later four Buddhist monks chanted a prayer.

Most of the marchers did not even bother to bring their passports. The Phnom Penh government, which earlier condemned the march as a "very vile action" designed to interfere in Cambodia's internal affairs, had said it would not permit their entry.

The relief supplies will be given to the Thai Red Cross on Thursday.

"We are not here to prejudge the situation but just to pose the questions of why Cambodia does not let in more doctors and more food," folk singer Joan Baez said.

Leo Cherne, head of the International Rescue Committee, called the march an "unqualified success" and added: "International attention — recently diverted by Afghanistan and Iran — has been re-focused on Cambodia."

Most of the marchers said only international pressure will force Cambodian authorities to permit greater international efforts to head off mass starvation in Cambodia. Millions of Cambodians are said to have died since the Communist regime of Pol Pot came to power in 1975.

New offer for British steel unions

LONDON (AP) — British Steel Corp. said Tuesday night it will make a new pay offer aimed at ending Britain's national steel strike now in its sixth week.

Robert Scholey, chief executive of the state-owned industry, announced after meeting secretly with the leaders of the two biggest steel unions at the European Steel Community's Luxembourg headquarters that full negotiations will begin shortly for the first time since the strike began Jan. 2.

Earlier Tuesday, the striking steelworkers began letting fires go out in coke ovens and blast furnaces, a move which could cause damage running into millions and set back steel production by months when it does resume.

So far, the banked fires have been tended by union volunteers. Management teams will be able to take on only part of the burden and officials said that if linings of coking ovens at one complex get so cold they collapse, the damage could take two years to repair.

"There comes a time in a strike when the gloves have to come off," said strike spokesman Stanley Sheridan.

Michael Grylls, a member of the governing Conservative party's industry committee, called it "an industrial scorched-earth policy," and urged strikers "not to cut their own throats."

British Steel Chairman Sir Charles Villiers said: "It's a great risk that the men are taking." Where damage is too great, he said, "we might decide not to re-open certain plants."

The corporation, with more than 100,000 men on strike, says it cannot afford the strikers' claim for 20-per-cent-increase in basic pay of about $300 a week.

Details of the new offer are being kept secret but it is certain to be an improvement on the last proposal of an eight-per-cent wage increase nationally and four per cent more in local productivity deals.

Mugabe escapes grenade attack

Times News Services

SALISBURY — Rhodesian guerrilla leader Robert Mugabe escaped injury early today when a grenade exploded outside the security wall of his home, but one of his political associates was badly wounded in a rocket attack on his home two hours before.

Four hours after the attack on Mugabe's home, the British governor, Lord Soames, threatened political parties with severe penalties in an effort to check the growing wave of violence in advance of the parliamentary elections Feb. 27-29.

Police said they arrested two black men suspected of hurling the grenade that exploded harmlessly near Mugabe's home in a Salisbury suburb about 3:30 a.m. They said they did not immediately know their names or political affiliation.

Mugabe, who recently led his guerrilla fighters back into Rhodesia from Mozambique after a seven-year guerrilla war for black-majority rule, was asleep in the house. Police said the house was being guarded by armed security men.

Kumbirai Kangayira, Mugabe's transport and welfare secretary and a candidate for parliament, was listed in satisfactory condition after a rocket exploded in his bedroom. His home is located in a neighboring suburb.

The police said a second smaller rocket landed in front of the one-storey house. People sleeping outside nearby said they saw two people at the gate just before the rockets were fired.

Mugabe's party, the Zimbabwe African National Union has said that 16,000 to 20,000 security force auxiliaries loyal to Bishop Abel Muzorewa of the African National Council are under orders to kill or harass rival leaders and their supporters. Muzorewa became Rhodesia's first black prime minister last year after an election boycotted by Mugabe and the co-leader of the guerrilla Patriotic Front, Joshua Nkomo, who heads the Zimbabwe African People's Union.

The ordinance Soames signed today empowers him to ban political meetings, stop candidates from campaigning in certain areas and outlaw parties violating the ceasefire. British sources said the governor hopes the threat of the ordinance will impel political leaders to stop the violence so that he will not have to ban any party.

Almost all the ceasefire violations have been blamed on rival black parties seeking to control this country of 6.7 million blacks and 230,000 whites that has been under white control for almost a century. Under the new constitution, 20 seats will be reserved for whites in the 100-seat parliament. The whites vote Feb. 14.

His supporters are accused by the Rhodesian military of launching a weekend rocket attack on a bus in which 16 died.

Rhodesian authorities say Mugabe supporters also have admitted murdering a black Roman Catholic priest, Raymond Machikocho, and his driver, who disappeared last Thursday.

The campaign for the Feb. 27-29 elections, leading to the colony's independence from Britain, has been marred by bloodshed and intimidation from all contending parties.

"It is of the utmost importance that this wave of violence and of intimidation should be turned back," Soames told the Election Council, which was set up to ensure a fair vote.

"It would be intolerable," he added, "for any party to be allowed to derive electoral advantage from the use of such tactics."

Soames asked all party leaders to sign a document affirming their commitment to the London agreement that produced the fragile ceasefire five weeks ago.

About 22,000 guerrillas, have reported to Commonwealth-monitored ceasefire assembly points.

But Soames's aides say thousands of guerrillas are still at large and hundreds more are leaving the 14 assembly points to indoctrinate rural Africans.

Nkomo's support is among the Ndebele tribe but this accounts for only 18 per cent of the African population of seven million.

To expand his following he must encroach on the Shona tribal areas, which are contested by Mugabe and Muzorewa.

January sales by GM strong

DETROIT (UPI) — A surprisingly solid performance by General Motors Corp. boosted January sales of U.S.-built cars to within 8 per cent of last year's strong levels, but imports fared even better.

General Motors Corp. said Tuesday its car sales in the final 10 days of January set an all-time record of 188,948 units, giving it a slight sales gain for the month over January, 1979.

But preliminary reports indicated January sales of imported cars would exceed 200,000, another record for foreign automobiles. As in the past few months, the Japanese led the way.

Reports from the five domestic automakers showed January sales of 587,739 U.S.-built cars, down 7.5 per cent from 635,149 in January, 1979. That was one of the smallest month-to-month declines U.S. automakers have posted since the current sales slump began last spring.

Ford Motor Co. said its sales were down 23.1 per cent from January, 1979, while Chrysler's were off 22.9 per cent, American Motors Corp.'s up 47.9 per cent and Volkwagen of America's sales of U.S.-built Rabbits up 15.8 per cent.

Oman raises oil price

MUSCAT, Oman (UPI) — Oman today joined five other Arab Gulf states and hiked its oil prices by $2 per barrel to $30.20 retroactive to Jan. 1, the Ministry of Oil and Mineral resources said.

Oman, a Persian Gulf state which is not a member of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, produces about 300,000 barrels of oil daily.

Repression still rampant

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. state department report says that human rights were repressed around the world in 1979 and that dictatorships of the left and right practised torture and cracked down on dissent. But here and there, the report said, freedom took a step forward.

In two Warsaw bloc countries, Poland and Hungary, internal controls were eased. In Argentina, the incidence of people seized without explanation dropped sharply and may be near an end. In Egypt, liberalization moved ahead under President Anwar Sadat.

These are among the findings in the annual human rights report of the state department, submitted on Tuesday to Congress. For the first time, all 154 countries were surveyed.

The document is a catalogue of massive violations. Only a few, such as the seizure of an estimated 50 American diplomats in Iran, are well known.

Iran appears to be a case of one repressive regime succeeding another. The fall of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi led to dissolution of the SAVAK secret police and the freeing of many political prisoners.

But under Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's rule, more than 700 executions were carried out, thousands of Iranians fled their countries and vigilante groups were allowed to take actions against the Bahais and other minority groups.

Canada gets a clean bill of health but it is noted that a royal commission is still looking into alleged civil rights abuses by the RCMP.

The report says Canada had authorized loans totalling $11.7 million from the United States in 1979.

Generally, the Canadian government is "almost entirely free from corruption," the report finds. Law enforcement agencies are well regarded.

There is serious national concern about the status of French Canadians in Confederation, but the Canadian government seems deeply committed to ensuring equal opportunities for all language groups, the state department says.

Sakharov issue at UN meeting

GENEVA (AP) — Canada and other Western countries urged a United Nations human rights meeting Tuesday to ask Soviet authorities for "full information" about the banishment from Moscow of dissident leader and Nobel Peace Prize winner Andrei Sakharov.

A French proposal, supported by the nine other Western members of the UN Human Rights Commission, asked the commission to send a telegram to Moscow expressing concern over Sakharov's position and asking for an immediate clarification.

Sakharov was banished last month to the industrial city of Gorki, 400 kilometres from Moscow.

The commission approved an Iraqi proposal to postpone any decision about sending such a telegram until later in the six-week meeting.

The French proposal brought an angry response from chief Soviet delegate to the commission, Valerian Zorin. He called it a deliberate move to "deviate the attention of the commission from more pressing (human rights) problems."

Calling the proposal a "perilous undertaking," Zorin said his delegation was "genuinely amazed" to be confronted with the Western move. "To raise a problem of this kind means to use the commission as a tool for the interference into the internal affairs of a country," he told the floor.

Diesel exhaust causes cancer?

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Researchers say they believe exhaust soot produced by diesel engines causes mutations in human cells and can be considered a possible cause of cancer.

Researchers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology announced the results of their experiments Tuesday, just weeks before the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency decides on whether to encourage large-scale production of diesel-powered cars in the U.S.

The experiments, part of a program set up at MIT three years ago by the department of energy, show that complex chemicals formed in the black soot cause significant genetic damage to living cells.

"It is mutagenic to human cells," said Professor William Thilly. "This means that we should consider it a potential hazard for humans."

Thilly said his researchers suspect that the principal mutagenic compounds in diesel emissions may be alkyl-substituted phenanthrenes and anthracenes — obscure, little-studied products apparently formed in the diesel fuel combustion process.

EATON'S CONSUMER TIPS
What you should know about appliances:

Washers:
Automatic washers come in models to fit nearly any home environment: apartments, townhouses or large homes. There are two basic types: top loading full sized washers and top loading in compacts or portables. The top loading full size has a capacity of up to 18 pounds of dry wash. Its agitator forces water through the clothes. The compact model has many of the same features found on larger units. Its capacity is up to 12 pounds of dry wash.

Dryers:
For safety, most have a door switch that stops the drum when the door is opened. They come in full size, compact or portable sizes for whatever sized home you have. As well as drying the clothes the dryer helps remove wrinkles. Normal loads require a drying time of about 40 minutes on a 220 volt circuit. Some dryers have sensing controls which keep the unit running until the moisture content of the air is at a certain level, and ensures the clothes are dry. The machine shuts off automatically. This feature is helpful in eliminating overdrying.

New horror tales from behind Afghan curtain

Times News Services

KABUL — Another gruesome Afghanistan massacre tale was reported today, while the Soviets protested against Chinese military intervention on behalf of Afghan rebels and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev called for renewed East-West detente.

An Afghan leader has said that under the Amin regime, thousands of prisoners were sub-machine-gunned down in Puli Chakri prison near Kabul and buried — sometimes not yet dead — in bulldozer-dug common graves.

The woman, a member of the ruling council of the revolution, used the pseudonym Soroya when she spoke to reporters on Tuesday.

As a militant of Parcham, the Afghan Marxist-Leninist group headed by Babrak Karmal, she was arrested shortly after Hafizullah Amin took power, she said. At the time, she was chairman of the Democratic Organization of Afghanistan Women.

She said that after her arrest, Amin's secret police spent five days giving her electric shock torture.

This included putting a live wire under her tongue while giving her large quantities of water to drink to make her body a better conductor.

She was also burned with lighted cigarettes and beaten, she said.

Soroya said her torturers, unable to obtain the information they sought on the internal structure of Parcham, sent her to Puli Charki, where thousands of people, including children, were incarcerated on mere suspicion or because they were related to a Parcham or Islam militants.

Crowding at the prison was such, she said, that prisoners were literally stacked one on top of the other.

Seven Western journalists were detained for more than two hours Tuesday at Puli Charki prison after a Soviet soldier accused one of them of photographing him.

Meanwhile, the Soviet news agency Tass said today Chinese advisers are being sent into Afghanistan along with thousands of Afghan rebels trained in China to fight the Soviet-backed Afghan government.

Tass quoted the ministry spokesman as saying "armed gangs" are being systematically smuggled across the frontier. "These gangs kill innocent people, burn peaceful villages, blow up bridges and spoil roads."

It also said "a number" of Afghan rebel bases were set up in Chinese territory.

On Tuesday, Western diplomatic sources in India reported the rebels had launched new attacks against Soviet troops in the remote province, inflicting casualties on Soviet units there.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev issued a call for renewed detente in a published speech, his first public statement since President Carter's State of the Union message.

Speaking this week to a Cambodian delegation headed by Heng Samrin, chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Brezhnev reportedly said, "Our peoples have a mutual concern to overcome international tension."

In a related development, the U.S. government has temporarily blocked future shipments of American-produced phosphates to the Soviet Union.

Haste made Pinto 'bomb'?

WINAMAC, Ind. (AP) — Ford Motor Co.'s Pinto model was hurried into production to compete with foreign sub-compact cars, sacrificing safety for style as a result, a former Ford executive says.

It was a "rush job" that worried some officials, Harley Copp said Tuesday in the auto-maker's trial on charges of reckless homicide.

The charges against Ford stem from the August, 1978, deaths of three teenagers whose 1973 Pinto sedan exploded when hit from behind. Prosecutors contend Ford knew the model's fuel system might cause fiery explosions, but charge that the company did nothing about it.

Copp was prevented Tuesday from testifying about fuel design and crash tests on 1971 and 1972 Pintos, blocking the state's attempt to show the 1973 Pinto was an outgrowth of earlier designs. Circuit Judge Harold Staffeldt said the state must first show the 1973 Pinto was unsafe and then try to connect it with 1971 and 1972 models.

Prosecutor Michael Cosentino said Staffeldt's ruling severely limited Copp's testimony.

Copp said Ford in the late 1960s set objectives of 2,000 pounds and $2,000 for the Pinto so the model could compete with foreign cars.

The result was "a remarkable car, a highly styled car," Copp said. But the car's body structure made it difficult for the rear of the car to accommodate luggage space and a spare tire, and leave adequate room around the fuel tank.

With the jury outside the courtroom, Copp told Staffeldt the 1971 and 1973 Pinto fuel systems were the same, although the 1973 model had some additional rear support.

"We have to show the design of the Pinto was reckless to begin with, that Ford knew the design was defective and had a duty to warn (the consumer)," Cosentino said:

Gold rises

LONDON (AP) — Gold rose to almost $700 U.S. an ounce in Europe today in advance of the International Monetary Fund's auction of 444,000 ounces of bullion later in the day. The U.S. dollar was mixed against leading world currencies. Gold hit an all-time high of $875 in New York on Jan. 21, then sank to $585 two days later in panicky trading.

Silver, which hit a record $49 an ounce Jan. 18, was quoted in London at $38.50, up $3.50 from Tuesday.

China-Viet peace talk fizzles out

PEKING (UPI) — Diplomatic sources said today the peace talks between China and Vietnam have collapsed and Vietnam's chief negotiator will be pulled out of Peking this month.

His departure plans follow an announcement that the head of the Chinese delegation is "too busy" to talk to the Vietnamese at present.

The breakdown in the talks comes at a critical moment, following open accusations by Vietnam that China, the United States and Thailand are running guns and food to Cambodian guerrillas.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed in active trading Wednesday, buffeted by alternating waves of buying and selling pressure.

The Dow rose nearly four points in early trading, and was off nearly four by midday. But neither move established a trend.

Defense issues, standouts during the January rally on Wall Street, gave up some of their gains today. McDonnell Douglas was down 2½ to $42⅞; Boeing ⅞ to $66½, and Lockheed 2⅛ to $39⅝.

U.S. Steel dropped ⅝ to $21⅜. Moody's Investors Service lowered its rating of the the company's three issues of sinking fund debentures from double-A to single-A.

Geneal Motors, which reported a surprising strong gain in car sales Tuesday for the last 10 days of January, picked up ¼ to $54¾.

Greyhound rose ⅛ to $18⅛ in active trading. On Tuesday the company reported higher fourth-quarter earnings and projected a strong 1980 showing.

question & answer

Q. I have eaten a vegetable in Europe that is referred to as barbe de pretre or priest's beard. Are you familiar with this?

A. In France it is better known as barbe de capucin or the beard of a Capuchin or Franciscan monk. The vegetable in question is wild chicory, a thin-stemmed green that resembles dandelion in appearance and is excellent but slightly bitter to the taste. I do not know where you can purchase wild chicory.

Q. In a recent column you spoke of a several-course meal that included "four entremets." I am confused. One source book on my shelf defines entremets as desserts. Another specifies that they are "side dishes." A. One of the most concise explanations of the term occurs in Larousse Gastronomique, which points out that the word actually means "between dishes" or "between foods." From the 14th through the 17th century in France, an entremet also meant an entertainment staged between courses by minstrels and troubadours.

"Nowadays," Larousse continues, "the word entremets means sweets and these are served in France after the cheese."

Q. Recently a new restaurant in Manhattan had on its menu green tea. Is this an herb tea?

A. There may be green herbal teas, but classic green teas — and I suspect that what you saw on that menu was one — are prepared from leaves of the tea plant.

To put it as succinctly as possible, the leaves used in the preparation of green tea or black tea are the same. The leaves are green when harvested.

Black teas are put through a fermentation or oxidation process, which accounts for their color. Green tea leaves are put through a withering or panning process, and their color when dried is much more like the original color.

Green tea is a staple in Japanese homes. It is also used in the preparation of green tea ice cream.

Bouillabaisse is not just fish soup

By PAUL CHUTKOW

MARSEILLE, France (AP) — You can joke about all the pickpockets around the old Marseille port. And natives of this sea-toughened town will even laugh about being the home of heroin's French Connection.

But don't kid a Marseillais about his bouillabaisse.

"My wife takes two days to prepare a bouillabaisse," a local harbor master said recently in an unmistakable regional twang.

If you think that's a fish story, just try joking about the harbor master's seeming hyperbole with almost any other native of Marseille, home of the famous fisherman's soup.

"Mais oui, mais oui," agreed a sophisticated Marseille intellectual. "That's it exactly, just like being in church or maybe even like standing before a master painting."

To see how seriously connoisseurs, rich or poor, take their bouillabaisse — and don't dare call it "fish soup" — go a few miles east along the coast to the fishermen's village of L'Estaque, where Paul Cezanne used to paint seascapes.

There, in the shadow of a docked supertanker and beside multicolored little wooden fishing boats, there is the waterside restaurant, La Reserve, where Madame Claire Gonzalez will part with a secret or two about her two-step bouillabaisse.

To her, bouillabaisse is a way of life, changing with the seasons or with the luck of her fishermen, susceptible to mood and individual taste, even whim.

"The broth is a bit too thin," complained one customer on a recent afternoon, sending a disconsolate Madame Gonzalez flying back to her kitchen to add a little fish pulp. A single satisfied smack of the lips, on the other hand, can send her scurrying for the pear liqueur in celebration.

Unlike some provincial cooks, this Frenchwoman, married to a Spaniard, makes the soup in two steps, and she prefers to serve it with an aioli sauce of garlic and mayonnaise and "rouille" sauce of garlic, pimiento, chili pepper and a dash of saffron.

To make her reddish-orange broth, Madame Gonzalez starts with several varieties of small, soft-meat fish and adds the olive oil, tomato, garlic, onion, leeks, parsley, saffron and fennel. And whereas the harbormaster's wife simmers the broth overnight, Madame Gonzalez takes two to three hours for hers.

When she's satisfied, she strains the broth, very fine to her taste, and then puts in larger, firm-meat fish, shellfish, and a few potatoes, allowing it to cook "no longer than 20 minutes."

Rascasse, which roughly translates as "hog-fish," is the backbone of most bouillabaisse but Madame Gonzalez doesn't overdo. On this particular afternoon, she mellowed it with crayfish, small hardshell crabs and four other kinds of native, white-meat fish caught off the harbor rocks.

The broth is served first, as hot as possible and poured over toasted slices of french bread.
